It is a novel, if not a somewhat startling, proposition that an officer of a corporation can refuse to produce its books when he is asked to account for property which has been committed to his charge, upon the ground that the production of the books may tend to incriminate him If such rule were to prevail, it is not difficult to see how a person who had once obtained possession of the books of a public or private corporation might evade accounting for property which had come into his possession by doing what his witness did, viz claiming that the production of such books would incriminate him, even though the production was solely for the purpose of enabling him to refresh his recollection concerning questions asked him But there is no such rule But the mere circumstance that the production of the document may render the witness liable to a civil action does not come within the protection of the rule Doe v Data 3 Q B 609 Taylor § 460 So also the privilege does not extend to public documents in the official custody of the witness Bradshaw v Murphy, 7 C & P 612

Unless he agreed in writing etc It amounts to waiver on his part

131 No one shall be compelled to produce documents in his possession, which any other person would be entitled to refuse to produce if they were in his possession, unless such last mentioned person consents to their production

Production of documents which another person having possession could refuse to produce

Principle This section is intended for the protection of persons whose title-deeds and other documents happen to be in the hands of their attorneys, stewards, &c., Fulmonth v Moss 4 Price, 455 In such a case the owner's consent is a necessary condition precedent to the production of the documents

Not Ev 315

S 132

Scope of the section Examples of persons having documents in their possession are agents, attorneys, trustees, mortgagees, &c., Whitley Stoles Vol II p 922 Is the attorney compellable to produce the documents placed in his possession by the client? This is not a question of compelling the disclosure of the attorney's knowledge he may know nothing of the contents of the document, nor is he asked to testify about them The answer depends upon the other privileges of the client irrespective of the privilege under s 126 infra The attorney is but the agent of the client to hold the deed if the client is compellable to give up possession then the attorney is, if the client is not then the attorney is not It is merely a question of possession and the attorney in this respect is like any other agent The extent of the client's obligation to produce must therefore be taken as determining the present question It follows then, that when the client himself would be privileged from production of the document either as a party, it common law or as a third person claiming title, or as exempt from self incrimination the attorney having possession of the document is not bound to produce Higmore § 2307 An attorney is not required to produce vouchers of his client before the Grand Jury on a charge of forgery R v Dixon 3 Burr 1637 So also an attorney is not compellable to produce the client's documents nor to prove their contents, when the client is privileged as a party to the cause Bothamley v Usborne Perke Add Cns 99 101, see also Lenny v Barclay 3 Stark 43 1, Harris v Hill 3 Stark 140, Nixon v Mayoh, 1 Mo & Rob 76, Mills v Oddy 6 C & P 728 731, Doe v Ross 7 M & W 102, 122, R v Hankins 2 C & K 823, Doe v Scaton 2 A & E 171, 181, Bate v Amisy, 1 Cr M & R 38 The attorney is not to produce his client's title deeds nor to disclose their contents Mills v Oddy 6 C & P 728 731 In Newton v Chaplin 10 C B 306 Maule J said The privilege of W C as to the book was the same in the hands of (the attorney) as if he had kept the book in his own hands On the other hand, if the client would be compellable to produce, either by motion or by subpoena or by bill of discovery, then the attorney is equally compellable if the document is in his custody to produce it under the appropriate procedure Pearson v Fletcher 5 Esp 90 Copeland v Watts, 1 Stark 95, Cosson v Dubois, Holt 239 Copen v Penplan, 2 Stark 260, Lowe v Fulms, 11 Price 455, Nauling v Howard Ry & Mo 61, Doe v Thomas 9 B & C 288, Doe v Langdon, 12 Q B 711, 719, Voeant v Sayer, 13 C B 231

132 A witness shall not be excused from answering any

Witness not excused from answering on ground that answer will criminate question as to any matter relevant to the matter in issue in any suit or in any civil or criminal proceeding, upon the ground that the answer to such question will criminate, or may tend directly or indirectly to criminate, such witness, or that it will expose, or tend directly or indirectly to expose, such witness to a penalty or forfeiture of any kind

Provido Provided that no such answer, which a witness shall be compelled to give, shall subject him to any arrest or prosecution, or be proved against him in any criminal proceeding, except a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer

Principle According to the English Law it is a settled rule that a witness is not to be compelled to answer any question, the answering of which has a

- S 132. tendency to expose him to a criminal prosecution or to proceedings for a penalty, or for a forfeiture even of an estate or interest. Nemo tenetur Scipsum accusare (No one is bound to criminate himself) Nemo tenetur Scipsum prodere (No one is bound to betray himself) Best J § 125. Steph Dig J c 1rt 120. Taylor § 1153, Mays v Haulins 111 & 210, R v Garbet 1 Den C C 26, Curright v Worcester 6 M & S 191. Paulhurd v Tenton 1 Mar 101. Pye v Butterfield 311 1 Q B 17. Chester v Wootby, 18 C B 299. R v Lord George Gordon 21 How St Tr 533, Le parte Leopolda 1 R 29 Ch D 283. R v Boyes 1 B & S 330. Upon a principle says Mr Sturges of humanity as well as of policy, every witness is protected from answering questions by doing which he would criminate himself. Of policy because it would place the witness under the strongest temptation to commit the crime of perjury and of humanity, because it would be to extort a confession of the truth by a kind of duress every species and degree of which the law abhors. It is pleasing to contrast the humanity and delicacy of the law of England in this respect with the cruel provisions of the Roman law, which allowed criminals and even witnesses in some instances to be put to the torture for the purpose of extorting a confession. Sturges on Evidence p 41. This rule was criticised by Bentham in his Rationale of Judicial Evidence Bk IX, pt IV C III and by Sir James Fitz James Stephen in his History of the Criminal Law Vol I pp 342 343 345 342 565. In the Report of the Committee on Trial Procedure of the Wisconsin Branch American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology (1910) the following remarks occur. A majority of our committee believe that the provisions in Section 8 Act I of our constitution that "No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself" has outlived its usefulness and would be abolished and that thereby one hiding place of crime would be destroyed. We have obtained the views of many active lawyers and Judges on this question and a large majority of those consulted have expressed the opinion that no innocent person would suffer and that more guilty ones would be detected and convicted if this provision would be repealed. Commenting on the English rule, Prof Hume says "In preserving this privilege however we must resolve not to give it more than its due significance. We do respect it rationally for its merits not worship it blindly as a fetish. We are not merely to emphasize its benefits but also to concede its shortcomings and guard against its abuses. Indirectly or ultimately it works for good,—for the good of the innocent accused and of the community at large. But directly and concretely it works for ill—for the protection of the guilty and the consequent derangement of civil order. The current judicial habit is to ignore its latter aspect and to find it undiscriminatingly with false sentiment a stranger from another legal sphere might imagine in the perusal of our precedent that the guilty criminal was the foul object of the Courts doing tenderness, guiding him at every step in the path of unrectitude and lifting up his feet lest he fall into the pits digged for him by justice and by his own offences. The judicial practice now too common of treating with warmth and fostering respect every appeal to this privilege and of untruly feigning each guilty inventor to be an unsullied victim bounded by the prosecutions of a tyrant is a work of traditional sentimentality. It invokes a confusion between the abstract privilege—which is indeed a bulwark of justice—and the individual entitled to it—who may be a monster of crime. There is no reason why Judges should lend themselves to confirming the mischievous impression that crime in itself is worthy of protection. The privilege cannot be enforced without protecting crime but that is a necessary evil inseparable from it, and not a reason for its existence. We should regret the evil not magnify it by approval. Hume § 2251. But in India the law is otherwise. By section 32 of Act II of 1855 a witness was not excused from answering any question relevant to the matter at issue, in any civil or criminal proceeding, upon the ground that the answer to such question would criminate or might tend directly or indirectly to criminate him or that it would expose, or tend directly or indirectly to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture. It contained, however, at the same time a provision that no answer the witness might thus be compelled to give should except for the purposes of punishment for false evidence, subject him to arrest or prosecution, or be used as evidence against him in any criminal proceeding. This section re-enacts the provision of section 32 of Act II of 1855. The reason for the change in thus stated by Turner C J in Queen v Gopal Das, 3 M 271, 279. "(Under the English law) a witness was not bound to criminate himself, but if he thought fit to do so, his admission on oath was equally admissible in evidence against him as any other admission. This state of the law in some cases tended to bring about a friction of justice for the allowance of the excuse when the matter to which the question related was in the knowledge solely of the witness, deprived the Court of the information which was essential to its arriving at a right decision. To avoid this inconvenience, and to obtain evidence which a witness refused to give it was suggested that, 'when the question was material to the issue, it should be left to the discretion of the Judge whether or not he would enforce an answer having regard to the general interests of justice, provided always, that if an answer should be expressed it should either have the effect of indemnifying the witness from any punishment, etc., with respect to the subject to which the answer related, or at least such answer should not be admissible evidence in any future criminal proceedings instituted against the witness' (Taylor § 1309). The Indian Legislature did not adopt this suggestion as it stood. The Indian Act gives the Judge no option to disallow a question as to matter relevant to the matter in issue. The end desired the production of evidence from unwilling witnesses, was sought by depriving them of the privilege they had theretofore enjoyed of claiming excuse but while subjecting them to compulsion, the Legislature, in order to remove any inducement to falsehood, declared that evidence so obtained should not be used against them except for the purpose of the Act declared. The object of the law was to secure evidence which theretofore could not have been obtained and it was not its object to afford any addition of protection to persons who, by an infraction of the criminal law, had exposed themselves to penalties." In the same case Muttusami Iyyar J said: "The necessity under which the witness lay of explaining how the answer might criminate him amounted in some cases—as observed by Baron Pollock in Adams v Lloyd, 3 H & N 362 and Maule J in Fisher v Ronalds, 12 C B 762 since overruled by R v Boyes, 1 B & S 311—to a virtual denial of the privilege, and to an evasion of the rule that no one is to be compelled to criminate himself." Then citing the above extract from Taylor on Evidence, he continued: "The principle suggested is when an answer is forced, that answer should be excluded in any future criminal proceeding instituted against the witness on the ground that no man shall be compelled to criminate himself and that such answer is analogous to an answer contained in the sworn examination of the accused in a criminal case. It seems to me that the legislature in India adopted this principle, repealed the law of privilege, and thereby obviated the necessity for an enquiry as to how the answer to a particular question might criminate a witness, and gave him an indemnity by prohibiting his answers from being used in evidence against him and thus secured the benefit of his answer to the cause of justice and the benefit of the rule that no one shall be compelled to criminate himself, to the witness when a criminal proceeding is instituted against him. That the English rule of absolute privilege does not apply proprio vigore in India is apparent from the proviso to this section McGill v Byrne 5 S L R 133=13 Ind Cis 217=13 Cr L J 25.

Scope of the section. This section abolishes the law of privileges and creates an obligation in a witness to answer every question material to the issue whether the answer criminate him or not, and gives him a right, as correlated to that duty, to claim that that answer shall not be admitted in evidence against him in criminal prosecution. Under this section it is not in the power of the Judge to excuse a witness from answering if the question is relevant to the issue. Queen v Gopal Das 3 M 171. Section 32 of Act II of 1855 is reproduced almost totidem verbis in this section. Per Innes J in ibid. Where an accused person has made a statement on oath voluntarily and without compulsion on the part of the Court to which the statement is made such statement, if relevant, may be used against him on his trial on a criminal charge. If a witness does not desire to give his answers used against him on a subsequent criminal charge he must object to answer, although he may know beforehand that such objection if the answer is relevant, is perfectly futile, so far as his duty to answer is concerned, and must be overruled. Ibid. Where a person is charged with an offence with which he is alleged to have incriminated himself in his deposition in a case, the fact that he was the person who gave the deposition should be proved. In re Ramayyengar 2 Weir 791. A statement containing defamatory matter against another, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding is a privileged statement under this section of the Act, for which such witness could not be proceeded against criminally. If the statement were false, he might be prosecuted for giving false evidence. Mataladin v Queen Empress, 3 O C 80.

S 132

Taking a thumb impression of a witness by the Court is not equivalent to asking a question and receiving an answer within the purview of the proviso of this section, and therefore, such a thumb impression may be proved against the person giving it in a criminal trial. Junno Shah v King Emperor 16 C W N 503=15 C L J 399=13 Ind C 1 925=39 C 348. Where an incriminating question is put to a witness, the Magistrate should explain to him his position and should advise him of his right; as otherwise, he may be induced, through ignorance of the state of the law to deny the truth for fear of penal consequences. In re Jaddanath Dutt 2 C L L 181, but see 1 Weir 153=3 M H (App) 29. When a co-accused is cited as a witness his position is sufficiently protected by this section. Raja Ram v Emperor, 5 Lah L J 429=73 Ind C 521=24 Cr L J 633.

Proviso. This section makes a distinction between those cases in which a witness voluntarily answers a question and those in which he is compelled to answer and has given him no protection in the latter of those cases only. The words 'be compelled to' clearly shows that the protection is afforded to answers which a witness has objected to give or which he has asked to be excused from giving and which then he has been compelled by the Court to give. Queen Empress v Ganu Sauba 12 B 440=Rat. Un Cr C 360 contra per Brundage J in ibid see also per Taraporewala J in 50 B 56 infra. The term 'shall be compelled' in section 132 appears to be the correlative of the term 'shall be excused' and they presuppose the rule that every person giving evidence on any subject before any Court or person authorized to administer oaths and affirmations shall be bound to state the truth and an authority competent at the time, to excuse or compel compliance with this rule. They also suggest that the witness has objected to the question and has sought and been refused excuse and even constrained to answer. The terms of this section when read with the rest of the Act afford protection only to answers to which a witness has objected or has been constrained by the Court to give. Queen v Gopal Das J M 371=2 Weir 781 contra Chaitu v Emperor 18 A L J 940=54 Ind C 825. The mere subpoenaing of a witness or ordering him to go into the witness box does not compel him to give any particular answer or to answer any particular question. The words 'which a witness shall be compelled to give' in this section are not a mere surplusage but apply to pressure put upon witness after he is in the box and when he asks to be excused from answering a question. But if a person makes such a statement without any compulsion and voluntarily it may be if relevant used against him in his trial on a criminal charge. Mohar Shukh v Queen Empress 21 C 392. Haidar Ali v Abu Ma 32 C 756=2 C L J 105=2 Cr L J 159=9 C W N 911, Queen Empress v Voss 16 A 88. Queen Empress v Bhukari Rat Un Cr C 660. The proviso to this section does not apply unless the witness objected to answer the question. Pungo Shah v King Emperor 16 C W N 503=15 C L J 399=13 Ind C 1 925=39 C 348. Deputy Superintendent v Promotha Nath, 6 Ind C 762=14 C W N 957=11 Cr L J 403=37 C 878. Queen Empress v Samappa 15 M 63. Where on the evidence given by certain witnesses in a murder case to the effect that they assisted the accused in concealing the dead body after murder they were prosecuted under section 201, the only evidence being their deposition held that their conviction was not illegal as they had omitted to object, perhaps owing to the want of legal advice to answer the question, on the ground that the answers would criminate them. In re Nalla Ramudu 2 Weir 792. When incriminating questions are put from the Bench to a witness who has become already entangled by self-contradictions, such questions should be put with the object of furthering the ends of justice.

in the judicial proceeding, in which such questions are put for elucidating the truth and not with a view to simplify any future proceedings which may possibly be taken against the witness in another Court. The position of such a witness under this section should be a rule be explained by the Court, before any incriminating question is put in the above circumstances. M. M. M. v. Queen Empress, L B R (1893 1900) 91. Where the accused had made in a previous enquiry under ss 162, 163 of Act VI of 1887, depositions on oath, without raising any objection to answer questions put to them under s 132 of the Evidence Act, the deposition of each of the accused is admissible in evidence against himself, but should not be taken into consideration against the other accused persons. Queen Empress v. Moss, 16 A 88=A W N 1894 23. After examination of plaintiff was over he was asked by the Judge why he was suing for his money to which he replied that he did not want to leave it with the defendant who was a Badmash and a thief. Held that the witness was compelled to answer the question put to him by the Judge under s 132 of the Indian Evidence Act and proceedings for defamation could not be taken against him. Ganga Sahai v. Emperor 42 A 257=18 A L J 112=24 Ind Cis 890=21 Cr L J 186. A witness must claim the benefit of the protection afforded by this section before he makes the statement in respect of which a question is subsequently raised. Kalu v. Sital 40 A 271=16 A L J 206=43 Ind Cis 823=19 Cr L J 231, Emperor v. Canna 22 Bom L R 1247=22 Cr L J 68=59 Ind Cis 324.

It is possible that a voluntary statement made by a witness may stand on a different footing from an answer to a question on oath. But where in answer is given by a witness in a criminal case on oath to a question put to him either by the Court or by the Counsel on either side especially when the question is not on a point which is relevant to the case he is within the protection afforded by section 132 of the Evidence Act whether or not the witness has objected to the question asked. Emperor v. Chatur Singh 43 A 92=18 A L J 940=2 U B L R 355=53 Ind Cis 825=21 Cr L J 825. "Compulsion" within the meaning of s 132 of the Evidence Act is a question of fact. Where in a criminal trial for wrongful possession of cocaine a witness for the defence made certain statements favourable to the accused with a view to convince the Court of the innocence of the accused and subsequently a prosecution was launched against the witness for such statements which proved to be false, held that the statements were not excluded by this section of the Evidence Act. Emperor v. Banarsi, 46 A 274=77 Ind Cis 829=22 A L J 144=25 Cr L J 477.

A statement made on oath by a person before a Coroner at an inquest held by him cannot be used against him in a trial for a charge based on such evidence as a statement tending to prove his guilt. Emperor v. Kari Danood 50 B 76=93 Ind Cis 225=27 Cr L J 433=28 Bom L R 79=A I R 1926 Bom 141.

A person who answers questions put to him by counsel without seeking the protection of s 132 of the Evidence Act is not entitled to protection in a charge of defamation and all that he is entitled to is the limited privilege under s 199 I P Code. Peddabha Reddy v. Varada Reddy, 52 M 132=29 L W 210=116 Ind Cis 337=30 Cr L J 613=1929 M W N 84=A I R 1929 Mad 286=36 M L J 570. Bai Shanta v. Umrao, A I R 1926 Bom 111=50 B 162=28 Bom L R 1 (P B).

133 An accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person, and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.

Principle It was frequently urged against an accomplice during the 1600's and 1700's that since by his own confession he was guilty of crime this fact thus acknowledged made him as incompetent as if it were proved by conviction for the crime. This argument is only broadly related to the maxim ne uno turpitudinem suam allegans audendus est. The notion underlying the maxim is that a person who comes upon the stand to testify that he has at a former time spoken falsely or acted corruptly is by his very confession, a liar and a villain, and therefore untrustworthy as a witness. The argument, however, was judicially repudiated from the very beginning—partly on the ground of necessity, partly on the ground that turpitude though self confessed, was no hindrance unless there had been a conviction of crime. Wigmore § § 525 526. In Tong's Case Kelyng, 18, the Court observed "It was resolved that some of these persons who were equally culpable with the rest may be made use of as witnesses against their fellows, and the law alloweth every one to be a witness who is not convicted or made infamous for some crime, and if it were not so, all treasons would be safe, and it would be impossible for any one who conspires with never so many others to make a discovery to any purpose." See also Chamuel's Trial 12 How St Tr 1377 1403. Similarly in Thistlewood's Trial, 33 How St Tr 681, 921, Abbott C J said "Dark and deep designs are seldom fully developed except to those who consent to become participants in them and can therefore be seldom exposed and brought to light by the testimony of untrainted witnesses. Such testimony is to be received on all occasions with great caution, it is to be carefully watched deliberately weighed, and anxiously considered. He who acknowledges himself to have become a party to a guilty purpose does by that very acknowledgment depreciate his own personal character and credit. If, however, it should ever be laid down as a practical rule in the administration of justice that the testimony of accomplices should be rejected as incredible the most mischievous consequences must necessarily ensue, because it must not only happen that many heinous crimes must pass unpunished but great encouragement will be given to bad men by withdrawing from their minds the fear of detection and punishment through the instrumentality of their partners in guilt and thereby universal confidence will be substituted for that distrust of each other which naturally possesses men engaged in wicked projects and which often operates as a restraint against the perpetration of offences to which the co operation of a multitude is required." Wigmore § 526. At common law, when two or more persons were tried upon the same charge, each and all were naturally disqualified. Only by ceasing to be a party in the cause could one then become a witness, for or against his co-defendants. Wigmore § 580.

S 133

Accomplice meaning of. "An accomplice is a person who has concurred in the commission of an offence." Per Manley J in R v Mullins 3 Cox Cr 756. The term "accomplice" signifies a guilty association in crime. United States v Peterson, Century Digest Vol 14 Col 1779. Where the witness sustains such a relation to the criminal act that he would be jointly indicted with the defendant he is an accomplice. White v Cowman Health Century Digest Vol 14 Col 1780. cited Ramasami v Emperor 27 M L 271 (277). Spies that is, persons who take measures to be able to give to the authority information so as to prevent those who are disposed to break out from effecting their purpose, are not accomplices. In the case of an accomplice, he acknowledges himself to be a criminal in the case of these men, they do not acknowledge anything of the kind. R v Mullins 3 Cox Cr 756. Queen Empress v Jasechuran, 19 B 563. R v Daryard 28 How St Tr 189. If he only put himself to the scheme for the purpose of convicting the guilty, he is not an accomplice. R v Douling 3 Cox C 509 (515). Bulley's Case 2 Cr App 53. Hensers Case, 6 Cr App 76. Where a witness is not concerned in the commission of the crime for which the accused is charged he can not be said to be an accomplice in the crime. Ramasami v Emperor 27 M L 271-14 M L 226. Spies do not partake of the criminal combination of accomplices who enter into communication with the conspirators with an original purpose of discovering their secret designs and disclosing them for the benefit of the public. Queen Empress v Jasechuran 19 B 563. The act of a detective in supplying marked money for the detection of a crime cannot be treated as that of an accomplice. Ibid.

An accomplice confesses himself a criminal. No man ought to be treated as an accomplice on mere suspicion unless he confesses that he had a conscious hand in the crime or makes a confession of facts showing that he had such hand. If the evidence of a witness falls short of these tests, he is not n accomplice, and his testimony must be judged on principles applicable to ordinary witnesses. Emperor v Percy Henry 11 Bom L R 1158=4 Ind C 1568=10 Cr L J 530. A person offering a bribe to a public officer is an accomplice. No distinction can be drawn between accomplices who voluntarily assist in the receipt of illegal gratifications and those who assist under compulsion. Queen Empress v Maganul, 14 B 115. Queen Empress v Chagan Dayaram 14 B 331, King Emperor v Mathai 26 B 193=3 Bom L R 694, Emperor v Edward William Smither, 26 M 1=2 Weir 521.

So an accomplice is a person who is in some way concerned in the commission of a crime for which the accused is on trial. This includes principals and accessories whether before or after the fact. A person against whom there is sufficient evidence to indict for the crime upon which the accused is standing trial is his accomplice. Mere knowledge or belief that a crime is to be committed or has been committed and the concealment of such knowledge does not render a witness an accomplice unless he aided or participated in the commission of the crime. Under the rule that participation in the crime is required to constitute an accomplice, the mere concealment of knowledge that a crime has been committed does not make the person concealing his knowledge an accomplice. This is the general rule and is sustained by the majority of cases. Poll v State, 36 Ark 117 (Am), Gathin v State 40 Tex Cr App 116. However this may be in the case of an accessory after the fact, it is well settled that all accessories before the fact if they actually participate at all in the preparation for the crime are accomplices within the rule but if their participation is limited to the knowledge that a crime is to be committed, they are not accomplices. Watson v State, 9 Tex App 237, Underhill Cr Ev § 69. But in Ramaswami Gounden v Emperor, 27 M 271, it was held that a person who after the murder was committed, assisted in the removal of the dead body from the place of murder to the pit in which it was buried, was not an accomplice.

A voluntary participation in the commission of the crime is required to constitute an accomplice. One who either by threats or coercion inciting in him a fear that he is in danger of losing his life or liberty under and by reason of such coercion and fear participates in a crime is not an accomplice. Whether a person is not an accomplice depends upon the facts in each particular case considered in connection with the nature of the crime. This is usually determined by the Court as a question of law. Parties to be accomplices must participate in the commission of the same crime. Thus a person who receives stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, is not an accomplice of the thief where the receiver did not participate in the commission of the larceny. The receiving and the larceny are distinct crimes. In perjury all persons who with knowledge of the falsity of the statement aid in the commission of the crime have been held as accomplices. Underhill Cr Ev § 69. A person from whom a Police Inspector extorted money by a threat of implicating him in a charge of murder, is an involuntary accomplice. Narayan v Emperor 2 Weir 809. A person, who accompanies another in order to witness the payment of a bribe, must be treated as an accomplice. Further, the evidence of a person who was a witness to the payment of a bribe in April or May, but who did not give information about it till the 21st June, must be treated in the same way as that of an accomplice. Nga Po That v Queen Empress, 1 L B R. 29.

The mere fact that a person is cognizant of an offence and omitted to disclose it for six days is not sufficient to constitute him an accomplice, when it does not appear that he helped in the commission of the offence. Ishan Chandra v Queen Empress, 21 C 328. The Government are justified in employing spies and a person so employed does not deserve to be blamed if he investigates offences no further than by pretending to concur with the perpetrators. Queen Empress v Jave Chand, 19 B 363. One who is a spy of a detective, associates with criminals solely for the purpose of discovering or making known their crimes, and who acts throughout with this purpose and without any criminal intent, is not an accomplice, and it is immaterial that he encouraged or aided the commission of the crime. Emperor v Chatarthuy, 8 Ind Cr 119=15 C. W. N 171=11 Cr L J 560.

S 133

But where from the facts of the case it appeared that certain witnesses took an active part in carrying away the person whose death the accused had been charged with having caused, after he had been grievously assaulted and left him in the field where he was subsequently found dead, those witnesses are no better than accomplices. Hamuddin v Queen Empress 23 C 361 A bribe-giver is an accomplice. Harsulh Rai v Emperor 3 P W R Cr 1919 To constitute an accomplice there need only be the intention of assisting in the commission of a crime but he need not know exactly what crime was being committed. An indication of the meaning of the word 'accomplice' may be found in section 137 of the Cr Pro Code. Suzja Kant v Emperor 24 C W N 119 Where a witness is found from his own testimony to be privy to the crime alleged to be committed by accused his evidence is no better than that of an accomplice. Aur Mahomed v Emperor 6 I L J 529 = A. I R 1925 Lah 253 A person who has knowledge of the commission of an offence but keeps quiet for some days is not better than an accomplice. Uned Sheikh v Emperor 27 Cr L J 1011 = 96 Ind Cas 567 = 30 C W N 816, see also Hayatu v Emperor A I R 1929 Lah 510

Who are not accomplices Witnesses to payment of bribes are not accomplices unless they co-operate in the payment of the bribes or are instrumental in the negotiation for the payment of the same. Deonandan v Emperor 33 C 649 = 10 C W N 669 = 3 Cr L J 452 Queen Empress v Deodar Singh 27 C 144, Emperor v Edmund 26 M 1 = 2 Weir 521 Khadam v Emperor 50 Ind Cas 18 But persons who accompany another who is entrusted with and carries the money intended to be given as a bribe are accomplices if they know that the money is to be had as a bribe and if they go to see and assist, although they do not actually carry the money or tender it. Hyom Kant v Asan Mullal, 2 C W N 672

Where money was paid to a Police Sub Inspector by a money lender for obtaining the release of a person wrongfully confined, the money not being voluntarily given nor given in consideration of the Sub Inspector not proceeding against the person so confined for the purpose of bringing him to legal punishment held that such payment was not an illegal gratification but money extorted and that the money lender advancing the money could not be regarded as an accomplice of the Police officer. Alhoy Kumar Chuckerbutty v Jagat Kumar Chuckerbutty 27 C 925 = 4 C W N 755 see also Deputy Legal Remembrancer v Upendra, 12 C W N 140 = 6 Cr I J 534 A person charged with an offence by the police but discharged by the Magistrate after examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, because he found that no case has been made out which if un rebutted would warrant his conviction cannot be said to be an accomplice. Nga Maung v Queen Empress, L B R (1893) 1900 467, Queen v Behary 7 W R Cr 44, Nabi Bulsh v Emperor, 12 P R 1902 Cr

A policeman or other person procuring an illegal sale of liquor in order to obtain a conviction is not an accomplice. Queen Empress v Barlin L B R (1893 1900) 365 overruling Mt The n v Queen Empress, L B R (1872 1892) 146, see also Queen v Nga, U B R (1897 1901) Vol I 176 Corroboration is not necessary in the case of persons apparently accomplices, who have entered into communication with conspirators but who have disclosed the conspiracy to the police authorities under whose direction they continue to act till the matter can be so far matured as to ensure a conviction. To such persons the rule as to corroboration does not apply. The early disclosure is considered as binding the party to his duty and though a great degree of disfavour may attach to him for the part he has acted as an informer yet his case is not treated as that of an accomplice. In re Shankar Shahaq, Rat Un Cr C 428 One who deposes that he only helped the accused in disposing of the body of the deceased after he was killed by the accused is no accomplice. Jehana v Emperor, 73 Ind Cas 506 = 24 Cr L J 618 = 1923 Lah 345

Accomplices in particular crimes In dealing with intoxicating liquor the buyer is an accomplice. In sexual offence the other person—usually the woman—may or may not be an accomplice, according as she is, by, the nature of the crime, a victim of it or a voluntary partner in it. Thus, in adultery, the other partner may well be deemed an accomplice, and so also perhaps, in incest (Brown's case, 6 Cr App 24, Drine's case, 7 Cr App 43, Bloodworth's case, 9 Cr App 80). But the woman is not an accomplice in rape, rape under age, seduction or abortion, nor the participant in sodomy. R v Jellyman, 8 C & P 604, Wignore & 2060. But the word 'accomplice' includes a person who consents to the commission of an unnatural offence with him or her. R v Jellyman, 8 C & P 604, R v Tate, (1908) 2 K B 680.

Distinction between an accomplice and informer. In criminal cases the distinction between an informer and an accomplice assumes at times considerable importance, and in order to determine whether a witness who first associated with the wrong doers and subsequently gave information to the police belongs to the first category or is an accomplice whose evidence cannot be accepted without corroboration, it has to be seen whether the witness had entered into the conspiracy for the sole purpose of detecting and betraying it or whether he is a person who concurred fully in the criminal designs of his co-conspirators for a time and joined in the execution of those till either out of fear or for some other reasons he turned on his former associates and gave information to the police. If at the time when he joined the conspiracy he had no intention of bringing his associates to book but his sole object was to partake in the commission of the crime, he cannot be called an informer but is an accomplice and his position is not modified simply because later on he turns round and carries information to the police. Mangal Rai v Emperor, 10 Lah L J 262=110 Ind Cas 676=29 Cr L J 740=A I R 1925 Lah 647 see also Karim Bulsh v Emperor, 9 Lah 550=109 Ind Cas 593=29 Cr L J 577=A I R 1928 Lah 193.

Scope of the section. Under this section a conviction is not illegal simply because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. But such evidence must be received with great caution and it is the practice of the Courts to require corroboration of such evidence. Queen Empress v Kallu, 7 A 166=A W N 1884 314. It is only under very exceptional circumstances that a conviction based only on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice could be sustained. Wazu Khan v Emperor, 57 P L R 1902=5 P R 1902 Cr. But there is no rule of law that an accused person cannot be convicted on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. It entirely depends on whether the evidence of the accomplice is or is not believed. Queen-Empress v Tipu A W N 1898, 28. Accomplice evidence is held untrustworthy for these reasons—(1) because an accomplice is likely to swear false in order to shift the guilt from himself, (2) because an accomplice is a participant in crime, and consequently is an immoral person, is likely to disregard the sanction of an oath and (3) because he gives his evidence under promise of a pardon, or in the expectation of an implied pardon, if he discloses all he knows against those with whom he acted criminally, and this hope would lead him to favour the prosecution. Queen Empress v Maganlal, 14 B 115. There is often danger that, for the purpose of saving themselves rather than stating the truth, the accomplices will make out a stronger case against the prisoner and more favourable to themselves than the real truth will warrant. They do not give their evidence under an absolute certainty of impunity, and probably some of them hope, not only to avoid prosecution but to retain their appointments in the government service. Ibid. "This section was not necessary," says Mr Justice Markby "as s. 118 makes all persons competent to testify, except those there enumerated. Nor is there any rule which requires that the evidence of an accomplice should be corroborated. But the emphatic statement in this section might lead persons to suppose that the Legislature desired to encourage convictions on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. This, however, cannot have been the case, because in s. 114 we find given as one of the presumptions based on the common course of human conduct, the presumption that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars. Moreover no conviction based on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice would be allowed to stand by a Court of appeal, except under

S. 133. very rare and exceptional circumstances, and if a Judge in his charge to the jury omitted to warn them against the danger of convicting on such uncorroborated evidence, he would be held to have convicted on such uncorroborated evidence—he would be held to have misdirected them. It would however have been better to omit this section. The law on the subject would then have been the same as it is now, and the awkwardness of appearing to sanction a practice so universally condemned would be avoided.” Marl Ey 98. The following point of law was raised in the certificate of the Advocate General in the Letters Patent Appeal in Mathu Kumar Suami Pillai v King Emperor, 35 M 397, namely—“Does the evidence of an accomplice require corroboration in material particulars before it can be acted upon, is it open to the Court to convict upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice if the Court is satisfied that the evidence is true, and does not the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 133, read with section 114, illustration (h) merely intend to lay down that a conviction upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is not illegal where the presumption of untrustworthiness attaching to the evidence of an accomplice is rebutted by special circumstances?” Benson Willis and Miller JJ answered, “The evidence of an accomplice need not be corroborated in material particulars before it can be acted upon and it is open to the Court to convict upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice if the Court is satisfied that the evidence is true. In the same case Benson J said ‘The substantive provision of the Indian Code law is contained in section 133 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, which in explicit terms declares that an accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. In my opinion there is nothing in the illustration (h) of section 114 which overrides or renders nugatory the plain and explicit declaration contained in section 133, or which requires us to hold that the evidence of an accomplice must always and in all circumstances be regarded as unworthy of credit unless it is corroborated in material particulars, or which requires us to hold that it is not open to the Court to act on such evidence, even when the Court believes it to be perfectly true. The very terms of the illustration itself appear to be intended to guard against such an interpretation. The words are the Court may presume (not ‘the Court shall presume’) that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars. But it then adds a caution to show that the presumed unworthiness is not a rule of universal application. It styles the presumption ‘a maxim’ not a rule of law, and says, but the Court shall also have regard to ‘certain facts’ in considering whether such maxim does or does not apply to the particular case before it. It then refers to a case of a person of the highest character giving evidence of an offence committed by the negligence of himself and another person of equally high character. The witness is an accomplice and he is not corroborated in any particular, still less the material particulars yet the Court should have regard to various circumstances viz the high character of the witness, and of the accused and the nature of the offence alleged and would be at liberty to refuse to draw any presumption against the credibility of the witness, even though his evidence stood alone and uncorroborated. It is no doubt true says Norman J “that, as mere matter of law, it is competent for a jury to convict on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice even in capital cases (See Best on Evidence page 182, Chitty, Criminal Law, page 605). But the danger of relying on such evidence is so great that in England Judges always advise the juries not to convict, or tell them they ought not to convict, unless the story of the accomplice is corroborated. Queen v Chuttedharee 5 W L Cr 59 are also R v Dina Shail 10 W R 63 Cr, R v Stubbs 25 L J M C 16 R v Ealahee Buksh, 5 W R 80 Cr R v Naul Jan 8 W R 19 Cr, R v Bycunt Nath Bawerjee, 10 W R 17 Cr, R v Mohima Chunder Doss, 15 W R Cr 37 R v Andhecrum, 18 W R Cr 45 1 Hale P C 308, 304 Charnock’s Case, 12 How St Tr 1377, Rex v Hudd, Cowp 331, Rex v Wood 2 Leach, C I 588, Durham’s Case, 2 Leach C L 538.

The subject of the credibility of the testimony of an accomplice and the necessity for the corroboration in order to sustain a conviction are involved in some confusion. The proposition that an accused person may be convicted on the evidence of an accomplice alone, and that the testimony of an accomplice must be corroborated, are both sound, though this involves a seeming inconsistency. The proposition that an accomplice must be corroborated does not mean that there must be cumulative or independent testimony to the same facts to which he has testified. So, evidence in a murder case that a coat belonging to deceased, was found in defendant's possession is proper corroboration though the accomplice testified only to the killing and not to the taking of the coat. Underhill v. El, § 730. Malachi v. State, 89 Ala. 134. "If the testimony of the accomplice, his manner of testifying, his appearance upon the witness stand impress the jury with the truth of his statement, there is no inflexible rule of law which prevents a conviction." Con v. Commonwealth, 125 Pa. St. 94, 103.

Under sections 118 and 133 Evidence Act, an accomplice is a competent witness. Nga Po Yu v. King Emperor, U B R 1906, Evidence 3=5 Cr L J 300. Karamal v. Emperor 81 Ind. Cas. 881=25 Cr L J 1057. Although it would generally be most unsafe to convict an accused, on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice yet, if the Judge, after considering and weighing the evidence thinks that it is true, and if believed establishes the guilt of the prisoner, it is his duty to convict. Queen Empress v. Gobardhan 9A 528=A W N 1887 156. Queen Empress v. Mogallal 143 11 B. Queen v. Godai 5 W R Cr 1. Empress v. Shahu, 5 C P L R 1 Cr., Crown v. Hoosarjee 27 P R 1869. The evidence of an accomplice may be admitted without corroboration if the witness is not open to the same charge as the accused. In the matter of Rojoni Kant, 13 W R Cr 24. The evidence of an approver has to be most carefully analyzed and considered. It must be so far above suspicion that a Court has no alternative but to accept and act upon it. When the Court believes in the approver's evidence in part, and disbelieves in part, it has no alternative but to reject the evidence altogether. Balkaran v. Emperor, 7 Ind. Cas. 185=11 Cr L J 441. The well known rule of criminal law "that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars" which is formulated in section 114, illustration (b) of the Evidence Act has a second branch, namely, that the corroboration must go to the guilt of each of the accused separately. It must be such as to satisfy the Court that the approver has not substituted the name of one or more of the accused for that of some other person possibly a particular friend of his own, who actually took part in the guilt. It is on that basis that the rule rests and it is a very sound rule. The rule is not absolute as will be evident from section 114 (illustration, b) and section 133 of the Evidence Act, but it is only in exceptional cases that the corroboration can be dispensed with. A witness who does not carry very much weight is not sufficient corroboration of an accomplice. Narain Singh v. Emperor 12 O L J 429=89 Ind. Cas. 261=26 Cr L J 1317=A I R 1925 Oudh 715, Emperor v. Blunt Rao 27 Bom L R 120=86 Ind. Cas. 72. Though illustration (b) of section 114 is not imperative the Courts examine ope caute insist upon the corroboration of an approver's evidence in material particulars. Tas-ullah v. Emperor A I R 1925 Sind 105, Kouramal v. Crown 19 S L R 183 see also Emperor v. Sunder Das, 26 Cr L J 1023=87 Ind. Cas. 916. Feroz Khan v. Emperor 86 Ind. Cas. 401=6 Lah L J 608=26 Cr L J 769=A I R 1925 Lah 268. Sheroo v. Emperor, A I R 1925 Nag 78. Mannalal v. Emperor A I R 1925 Oudh 1. An accomplice is a competent witness and may be examined on oath. Joseph v. Emperor 3 Ring 11=26 Cr L J 492=85 Ind. Cas. 236=3 Bur L J 265. Abdul v. Emperor, 47 A 39, Balchand v. Emperor, L R 197 (Cr).

Accomplice evidence and corroboration. In R v. Rudd, 1 Cowp 331, 336, Lord Mansfield, after referring to the competency of accomplices as approvers said: "Though under this practice they are clearly competent witnesses, this single testimony alone is seldom of sufficient weight to convict the offenders." "As to the origin of this practice of requiring confirmation at all it cannot be clearly traced. It was not laid down or acted on in the time of Lord Holt, that is upto 1710. It was after this decision in Rudd's case (decided

- S 133. in 1777) that the practice must have been introduced " Plunkett, Evidence of Accomplices, 2 In R v Smith, 1 Leach Cr L 1th Ed 179, which was decided in 1781 corroboration was hinted at as necessary. There the prosecution being unable to identify the criminal the Court thought it dangerous to let the case go to the jury on accomplice evidence alone. See also R v Wood, 1 Leach Cr L 1th Ed 161, R v Durham, ib 178. But in England that practice was not founded on any rule of law until very modern times. It was recognized constantly that the Judge's instruction upon this point was a mere exercise of his common law function of advising the jury upon the weight of the evidence, and was not a statement of a rule of law binding upon the jury. Wignore § 2036, see also R v Despard 28 How St 1r 316 (1817), R v Jones, 2 Camp 132, R v Dauber, 3 Stark 31, R v Sheehan, Jebb 54, R v Hastings, 7 C & P 152, R v Wilkes, 7 C & P 272, R v Car, Jebb 203. Simmons v Simmons, 1 Rob Eccl 566, 575 R v Mullins 7 State 1r N S 1110, R v Diana 5 Cox Cr 507, R v Stubbs 1 Dears 555, McClory v Wright, 10 Ir C L 411 Magee v Magee 11 Ir C L 119, R v Boyes, 1 B & S 311, 320, Re Monnier, (1891) 2 Q B 410, 118. In h v Mullins, 3 Cox Cr 526, Moule J said. The truth of the matter is, there is no rule of law at all that an accomplice cannot be believed unless he is confirmed. It is an observation addressed to the jury who have to weigh the evidence and it is for them to say whether the confirmation will satisfy them or whether they will be satisfied without any. If they are satisfied without any, they may be and their verdict may be an honest and just and true one. The direction of Judges given to juries in this respect are not directions in point of law which juries are bound to adopt, but observations respecting facts, which Judges are very properly in the habit of giving because with respect to matters of fact the Judge is well as the counsel upon both sides endeavour to assist the jury. But in England since the establishment of the Court of Criminal Appeal there is a definite rule of law. R v Tate (1903) 2 K B 680 R v Baskerville (1916) 2 K B 653, R v Feignbaum, (1919) 1 K B 431, Wignore § 2036. It is not necessary that an approver should be corroborated as regards every single statement that he makes. On uncorroborated points he can be believed, if the jury thought it reasonable. Ledu Molto v Emperor, 52 C 595=87 Ind Cas 965=42 C L J 501. Clear proof of motive for murder and discovery of minute spots of blood on the accused's shirt cannot be regarded as material corroboration of an approver's statement. Jit Singh v Emperor 86 Ind Cas 811=26 P L R 124=26 Cr L J 875. Sheo Ambor v Emperor, A I R 1925 Oudh 295. To support a conviction on the basis of the evidence of an approver is not sufficient that if the approver's testimony is not confirmed as to the circumstances of the felony which would only show that he was present at the commission of the offence but it must be proved that the testimony is corroborated in some material circumstances, such circumstances connecting and identifying the prisoner with the offence. Katlu v Crown, 98 Ind Cas 190=27 P L R 615 Jagwa v Emperor, 5 Pat 63=93 Ind Cas 884=A I R 1926 Pat 232. Jang Singh v Emperor, 96 Ind Cas 262=27 Cr L J 918, Pratab Singh v Emperor 96 Ind Cas 127=27 Cr L J 879=A I R 1926 All 70, Emperor v Satish Chandra 31 C W N 551=54 C 721 Chanan Singh v Crown, 99 Ind Cas 929=8 Lah L J 610=A I R 1927 Lah 78, Ram Prasad Emperor A I R 1927 Oudh 369, Barlati v Emperor 103 Ind Cas 48=A I R 1927 Lah 581.

Although in criminal trials it is the settled practice to require other evidence in corroboration of that of an accomplice yet the manner and extent of the corroboration required are not so clearly defined. Some Judges have deemed it sufficient if the witness be confirmed in any material part of the case, others have been satisfied with confirmatory evidence as to the corpus delicti only but others, with more reason, have thought it essential that corroborative proof should be given of the prisoner having actually participated in the offence, and, when several prisoners are tried, that confirmation should be required as to all of them before all can be safely convicted. R v Stubbs, 25 L J M C 16. This last is undoubtedly now the prevailing opinion, the confirmation of the witness as to the commission of the crime being considered no confirmation at all as it respects the prisoner. For, in describing the circumstances of the offence, he may have no inducement to speak falsely but on the contrary every motive to declare the truth, if he wishes to be believed when he shall afterwards endeavour to fix the crime upon the prisoner. R v Farler 8 C & P 106, R v Willes 7 C & P 272 R v Moores, 2 C & P 270 R v Addis, 6 C & P 388, R v Wells, M & M 326, R v Sheenan, Jebb C C 54 R v Carey, Jebb C C 263 Taylor Ex § 969, Green Ex § 381. It is a practice" said Lord Abinger in R v Farler, 8 C & P 107 108 "which deserves all the reverence of the law, that Judges have uniformly told juries that they ought not to pay any respect to the testimony of an accomplice, unless the accomplice is corroborated in some material circumstance. Now in my opinion that corroboration ought to consist in some circumstance that affects the identity of the party accused. A man who has been guilty of a crime himself will always be able to relate the facts of the case, and if the confirmation be only on the truth of that history without identifying the persons that is really no corroboration at all. If a man were to break open a house and put a knife to your throat, and steal your property it would be no corroboration that he had stated all the facts correctly, that he had described how the person did put a knife to the throat, and did steal the property. It would not all tend to show that the party accused participated in it. The danger is, that when a man is fixed, and knows that his own guilt is detected he will purchase impunity by falsely accusing others."

Criticising on the above statement of law, Chief Baron Joy in his Evidence of Accomplices said "There are different opinions entertained upon the subject—First some hold that the corroboration required must go to the criminality or identification of every prisoner on trial accused by the accomplice—Lastly others are of opinion that the points of corroboration are not necessarily confined to the criminality or identification of any of the prisoners, but that it is enough if the testimony of the accomplice is confirmed in such and so many material parts of it as may reasonably induce the jury to credit him as to the entire narrative, and among other parts, is to the guilt of the prisoners. The first opinion appears plausible, and the arguments in support of it are specious, and are apt to captivate those who do not attentively consider the subject."

This opinion originates in a misconception as to the nature of the defects in the evidence which is to be supplied. The defect in the evidence is not in its quantity, but in its quality. The witness swearing directly to the prisoner's guilt, that guilt is established if the witness be credible. What therefore is required is to throw something no matter of what nature, into the opposite scale, which will serve as a counterpoise to the impeachment of the witness's credit arising from the character in which he appears, something that will improve the quality of the proof which has been given by the accomplice, and that something may be anything, which induces a rational belief in the mind of the jury that the narrative of the accomplice is in all respects a correct one. Now, if we try the question by what passes in our minds, we shall find that there may be many things which may contribute to inspire us with a rational confidence in the testimony of an accomplice as well as some corroboration is to that part of the evidence which goes to affect the prisoner. The correct and accurate manner in which an accomplice details the circumstances of the transaction show that he was cool and collected, that he possessed observation that his recollection is fresh, that he was an observer, not an inventor of facts and incidents, and if we find that in every point in which the evidence of other witnesses can be brought into contact with his, they fit into one another and correspond exactly, it is good ground for presuming that his entire narrative is correct. The accomplice, who must be supposed to know the whole details is expected to relate them, and is thus exposed to detection in a variety of ways. There is therefore less necessity for breaking the general uniformity and destroying the harmony of the rules of law, in this case, than in the other. Similarly in Fidd's Trial 33 How St Tr 1483, in charging the jury Garrick B said "It may not be unfit to observe to you here that the confirmation to be desired to an accomplice is not a reputation by others of the whole story of the accomplice and a confirmation of every part of it, that would be either impossible or unnecessary and absurd, and therefore you are to look to the circumstances to see whether there are such a number of important facts confirmed as to give you reason to be persuaded that the main body of the story is correct. You are, each of you, to ask yourself this question. Now that I have heard the accomplice and have heard other circumstances which are said to confirm the story he has told does he appear to me to be so confirmed by unimpeachable evidence, as to some of the persons affected by his story or with respect to some of the facts stated by him, as to afford me good ground to believe that he also speaks the truth with regard to other prisoners or other facts with regard to which there may be no confirmation? Do I, upon the whole feel convinced in my conscience that his evidence is true and such as I may simply act upon?' See also R v Despard, 28 How St Tr 346 487, R v Burtlett and Brady R & R 252, Higmore § 2059. Though it is not a rule of law it is yet correct to say that the evidence of an accomplice requires just as much corroboration or as little corroboration as is needed to convince a prudent person of the truth of the facts alleged against the accused Mannu v Empress, 14 P R 1891 Cr Under section 133, Evidence Act the evidence of an accomplice by itself is enough for a conviction but it is a rule of practice founded on experience, that in every case where an accomplice has given evidence the Court must raise a presumption that he is unworthy of credit unless corroborated in material particulars. Failure to raise this presumption is an error of law, but in each case the weight to attach must depend on the particular circumstances Madan Guru v Emperor 4 Pat L T 381-73 Ind Cas 953-24 Cr L J 723, see also Tota Singh v Emperor, 69 Ind Cas 463-23 Cr L J 734, Emperor v Darya Singh 1923 Lah 666. The demeanour of an accomplice in the witness box cannot be a substitute for corroboration Mannalal v Emperor, 9 O & A L R 947. The principles as to approver's evidence are as follows. The evidence of an approver does not differ from the evidence of any other witness save in one particular respect, namely that the evidence of an accomplice is regarded ab initio as open to grave suspicion. Accordingly if the suspicion which attaches to the evidence of an accomplice be not removed it should not be acted upon unless corroborated in some material particular and if the suspicion attaching to the accomplice's evidence be removed then that evidence may be acted upon even though uncorroborated and the guilt of the accused may be established upon that evidence alone. In order to ascertain whether the evidence of the accomplice is truthful and therefore exempt from the requirements of corroboration the tribunal should apply intrinsic as well as extrinsic tests but if being applied that test it comes to the conclusion that the accomplice is a truthful person the accomplice becomes an ordinary witness. Section 134 becomes operative and the tribunal may proceed to convict upon his evidence. Rattan Dhamil v Emperor 9 Pat L T 672-A 1 R 1928 Pat 630. There is nothing in the law to prevent a Court from convicting the accused on the uncorroborated evidence of an approver but it would be exceedingly dangerous to do so. There must be corroboration of his evidence in material particulars by impartial and reliable evidence. Corroboration by an accomplice is worthless as is corroboration by a witness whose competence of truthfulness is under suspicion. Evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect them with the crimes. In other words it must be evidence which implicates them confirming in some material particulars the fact of the commission of the offence and that the accused had a hand therein. It is not necessary however that the approver should be corroborated as regards every single statement. Sureshchandra v Emperor 47 C L J 471-A 1 R 1928 Cal 309, see also Latafat Hussain v Emperor 33 C W N 58-A 1 R 1928 Cal 745 Kailash v Emperor, 48 C L J 481, Narain v Emperor 107 Ind Cas 57-29 Cr L J 209.

S 133

Corroboration as regards the identity of the prisoner. In England originally there was no necessity of specific corroboration as regards the accused's identity. R v Despard, 28 How St Tr 346 487, R v Burtlett and

Brady, R & R 252 But the opposite opinion began to be taken at Nisi Prius, and finally prevailed. Now it is settled that there must be corroboration both of the circumstances of the crime and the identity of the prisoner. Roscoe Cr Ev, 152, see also *R v Sheehan, Jebb 51, R v Addis, 6 C & P 388, R v Webb 5 C & P 595, R v Wilkes 7 C & P 272 273, R v Barker, 8 C & P 106, R v Kelsey, 2 Lew Cr C 45 R v Dyle, 8 C & P 261, R v Birkett 8 C & P 722 R v Stubbs, 7 Cox Cr 48. JP Clory v Wright, 10 Ir C L 514 521 Everest's Case, 2 Cr App 130, Warren's Case, 2 Cr App 191. In Everest's Case supra, it was held that corroboration must be in regards 'some particular which goes to implicate the accused' But in Wilson's Case, 6 Cr App 125 the Court said 'It must not be supposed that corroboration is required amounting to independent evidence implicating the accused.' In Blatherwick's Case 6 Cr App 281, the Court said 'Everest's Case goes too far. Wilson's Case is the correct statement of the law' See also Watson's Case 8 Cr App 219 In Cohen's Case 10 Cr App 91 101, Reading L C J said 'It is sufficient to say that Everest's Case and Wilson's Case seem to us to lay down the right principle' Again in Threlfall's Case, 10 Cr App 112 117 the same learned Judge said 'Without attempting to decide whether Everest's Case or Wilson's Case is correct and assuming that Everest's Case is correct' But in R v Willis, (1916) 1 K B 933, Reading L C J said 'This Court had no intention (in R v Cohen) to unsettle the law as established in R v Wilson and R v Blatherwick' In R v Baskerville, (1916) 2 K B 658=86 L J K B 28, the same learned Judge however reviewing the law said, 'The difference of opinion has arisen in the main in reference to the question whether the corroborative evidence must connect the accused with the crime. The rule of practice as to corroboration has arisen in consequence of the danger of convicting a person upon the unconfirmed testimony of one who is admittedly a criminal. What is required is some additional evidence rendering it probable that the story of the accomplice is true, and that it is reasonably safe to act upon it. If the only independent evidence relates to an incident in the commission of the crime which does not connect the accused with it or if the only independent evidence relates to the identity of the accused without connecting him with the crime is it corroborative evidence? There are some expressions to be found in the books which imply that it may be, and in Rex v Birket (Russ E R 251) the Judges were of opinion that an accomplice did not require confirmation as to the person so charged if he was confirmed as to the particulars of his story. The case is very imperfectly reported, and the evidence is not stated. It was not argued by counsel, but was stated verbally to a meeting of the Judges by the Judge who tried the case. There are other cases where it has been held that a conviction on such evidence could not be quashed by the Court but the ratio decidendi is that as an accomplice is a competent witness, and the jury thought him worthy of credit, the verdict was in accordance with the law—Rex v Atwood (1 Leach C C 464) and Rex v Jones (1809) 2 Camp 131. There are other cases where it has been held that on such evidence the case cannot be withdrawn from the jury. Rex v Hastings (1935) (7 Car & P 152), Reg v Andreus (1 Cox C C 183 per Mr Justice Coleridge) and Reg v Avery (1845) (1 Cox C C 206). After examining these and other authorities to the present date, we have come to the conclusion that the better opinion of the law upon this point is that stated in Reg v Stuffs (25 I J M C 16, Derr C C 155) by Baron Parke—namely, that the evidence of an accomplice must be confirmed not only as to the circumstances of the crime, but also as to the identity of the prisoner. The learned Baron does not mean that there must be confirmation of all the circumstances of the crime, as we have said already—that is unnecessary. 'It is sufficient if there is confirmation as to a material circumstance of the crime and of the identity of the accused in relation to the crime. Baron Parke gave his opinion as the result of twenty five years practice, it was accepted by the other Judges, and has been much relied upon in later cases. In Rex v Wilkes, (1836) (7 Car & P 272) Baron Alderson said 'The confirmation which I always advise juries to require, is a confirmation of the accomplice in some fact which goes to base the guilt on the particular person charged. You may legally convict on the evidence of an accomplice only, if you can safely rely on his testimony, but I advise juries never to act*

S 133. on the evidence of an accomplice unless he is confirmed as to the particular person who is charged with the offence' In Reg v Barler (8 Car & P 106) Lord Chief Baron Abinger said 'It is a practice which deserves all the reverence of law, that Judges have uniformly told juries that they ought not to pay any respect to the testimony of an accomplice, unless the accomplice is corroborated in some material circumstance. Now in my opinion, that corroboration ought to consist in some circumstance that affects the identity of the party accused. A man who has been guilty of a crime himself will always be able to relate the facts of the case, and if the confirmation be only on the truth of that history without identifying the persons, that is really no corroboration at all. It would not at all tend to show that the party accused participated in it.' In Reg v Dyke (8 Car & P 261) Baron Gurney said 'Although in some instances, it has been so held, you will find that in the majority of recent cases it is laid down that the confirmation should be as to some matter which goes to connect the prisoner with the transaction. In Reg v Birtlett, (8 Car & P 732) the prisoner was indicted for receiving stolen sheep. The evidence consisted of the statement of an accomplice and to confirm it, it was proved that a quantity of mutton corresponding in size with the sheep stolen was found in the prisoner's house. In Justice Patterson said 'If the confirmation had merely gone to the extent of confirming the accomplice as to matters connected with himself only, it would not have been sufficient. But here we have a great deal more, we have a quantity of mutton found in the house in which the prisoner resides and that I think is such a confirmation of the accomplice's evidence as I must leave to the jury.'

'These cases lead to the view expressed later by Baron Parke in Reg v Stubbs 25 L. J. M. C. 16—Deer C. C. 555 and shew that in his time, although there had been doubt in the past the law as formulated by him was accepted as the correct opinion, and continued to be the law to the time of passing of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, and in our judgment to the present day.

'We hold that evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him—that is, which confirms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it. The test applicable to determine the nature and extent of the corroboration is thus the same, whether the case falls within the rule of practice at common law or with in that class of offence for which corroboration is required by statute. The language of the statute, implicates the accused, compendiously incorporates the test applicable at common law in the rule of practice. The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. It would be in a high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration except to say that the story of the accomplice that the accused committed the crime is true, not merely that the crime has been committed, but that it was committed by the accused.

The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime: it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. A good instance of this indirect evidence is to be found in Reg v Birtlett, (8 Car & P 732). Were the law otherwise, many crimes which are usually committed between accomplices in secret, such as incest, offences with females, or the present case, could never be brought to justice.

The decisions of this Court upon the nature of the corroboration required call for some explanation and it is because they do not always appear to be to the same effect that this Court was especially constituted in order that we might lay down rules for future guidance.

In Rex v Fierest 2 Cr App R. 130 the Court said 'The rule has long been established that the Judge should tell the jury to acquit the prisoner if the only evidence against him is that of an accomplice, unless that evidence is corroborated in some particular which goes to implicate the accused. We think 'tell the jury to acquit' should read 'warn the jury of the charges of convicting.' There is no statement in the report of the exact warning given

- S 133. in the case, it would be merely confirmatory of other and independent testimony. Again, the corroboration must be by some evidence other than that of an accomplice, and therefore one accomplice's evidence is not corroborative of the testimony of another accomplice. Rex v. Ayles 5 Car. & P. 326. Per Lord Reading J in Rex v. Barter 111 L. J. K. B. 28 (33). So long established a rule of practice as that which makes it prudent as a general rule, to require corroboration of accomplices, cannot without great danger to society be ignored by the Magistrates and Sessions Judges, simply because section 133 Evidence Act, declares that a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The Courts should give proper effect to the provisions of section 111, illustration (b). The rule in section 111 illustration (b) and that in section 133 are part of one subject and both are found in most of the great judgments, and neither section is to be ignored in the exercise of judicial discretion. The illustration (b) to section 111 is the rule, and when it is departed from the Court should show or it should appear that, the circumstances justify the exceptional treatment of the case. Queen Empress v. Chagoo Dayaram, 11 B. 331. Although a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, the evidence of an accomplice, ordinarily speaking, should be corroborated in material particulars and such evidence should be accepted with a great deal of caution and scrutiny. The amount of criminality is a matter for consideration, and when a person is only an accomplice by implication or in a secondary sense, his evidence does not require the same amount of corroboration as that of a person who is an actual perpetrator with the principal offender. In dealing with the question what amount of corroboration is required in the case of testimony given by an accomplice, the Court must exercise careful discrimination and look at all the surrounding circumstances in order to arrive at a conclusion whether the facts deposed to by the person alleged to be an accomplice are borne out by those circumstances or whether the circumstances are of such a nature that the evidence purporting to be given by the alleged accomplice should be supported in essential and material particulars by evidence alundi, as to the facts deposed to by that accomplice. Kanaka Prasad v. Sital Prasad, 28 C. 339=5 C. W. N. 517. The evidence of a pardoned accomplice taken with the statements of unpardoned co-prisoners is not sufficient by itself to warrant the conviction of those who never confessed. Queen Empress v. Bhagya, Rat. Un. Cr. C. 750. Where material discrepancies occur between the statements of the corroborating witnesses before the Police and their depositions in the Court, either on enquiry or trial there is no corroboration and consequently the prosecution must fail. Imai Das v. Crown, 36 P. W. R. 1910 Cr.=8 Ind. Cas. 193=11 Cr. L. J. 58. The rule as laid down in illustration (b) to section 111 of the Evidence Act, does not apply to all persons, who technically come within this category of accomplices. The particular circumstances of each case will effect its application and no general rule can be laid down on this point. Deonandan v. Emperor 10 C. W. N. 669=33 C. 649=3 Cr. L. J. 452. In cases where the act of the accomplice imports no great moral delinquency the presumption enacted in s. 111 illus. (b), does not apply. Crown v. Isardas 6 S. L. R. 106=17 Ind. Cas. 79=13 Cr. L. J. 767. see also King Emperor v. Malhar, 26 B. 193=3 Bom. L. R. 694, Queen Empress v. Mangal, 14 B. 115. There is no rule of law or practice that the self-incriminating portion of the evidence of an accomplice is unworthy of belief unless corroborated. Emperor v. Hanmant 6 Bom. L. R. 413. However convincing the testimony of an accomplice may be of the facts necessary to be proved, it has become a settled course of practice not to convict an accused person on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver, and the corroboration ought to consist in some circumstances that affect the identity of the accused. Emperor v. Bai Krishna, 6 Bom. L. R. 481, per Craze J. The corroboration required of the testimony of an accomplice should go to some circumstances affecting the identity of the accused participating in the transaction. Such corroboration ought to be that which is derived from unimpeachable or independent evidence as distinguished from that derived from the earlier statements of the same accomplice or the statements of other accomplices. Ibid per Chaudhary J.

There must be corroborative evidence not only as to the identity of the person spoken of as the accused but also as to the corpus delicti Reg v Chatur Rat Un Cr C 102, Reg v Nanulhan, Rat Un Cr C 102. A person cannot be convicted upon the evidence of witnesses, who are no better than accomplices, if this evidence is not corroborated in material respects by other independent evidence in the case Jogendra Nath v Sangap Garo, 2 C W N 55.

The rule of evidence contained in s 133 and in s 114 (b) of the Evidence Act amounts to nothing more than a direction to all Judges and Magistrates that a fact cannot reasonably be held proved within the meaning of section 3, if there be no other evidence of it than the statement of an unreliable witness Crown v Ramchand 6 S L R 195=14 Cr L J 262=19 Ind Crs 34. Section 114 of the Evidence Act enacts a rule of presumption, and read with s 4 of the Act it indicates that this is not a hard and fast presumption, incapable of rebuttal, a presumptio juris et de jure Emperor v Shumias, 7 Bom L R 909=3 Cr L J 33.

Prior to the Evidence Act, the rule not of law, but of practice was that a conviction could not be founded on the unsupported evidence of an accomplice, that the accused person's statement was no evidence against a fellow prisoner or one tried jointly with the person making the statement and that such statement was only admissible in evidence when made in the witness box Crown v Nihal Singh 31 P R 1866 Cr, Queen v Jumeesputa 124 P R 1866 Cr, Queen v Boora 123 P R 1866 Cr, Deva v Crown, 27 P R 1867 Cr, Crown v Jaram 28 P R 1867 Cr, Crown v Ruheemoo, 38 P R 1867 Cr, Queen v Goda 5 W R Cr 11, Crown v Hooramoo 27 P R 1869, Empress v Shukur 5 C P L R 1 Cr. But where a Magistrate treated a mere witness as an accomplice and granted him conditional pardon his evidence does not require corroboration Reg v Fattchechand, 5 B H C Cr 85. In ordinary cases the uncorroborated testimony of an approver is not sufficient to convict a person charged with an offence Queen v Tulsi 3 B L R A Cr 66, Queen v Issen 3 W R Cr 8, Queen v Nawab Jan 8 W R Cr 19, Queen v Ramsagar, 8 W R Cr 57, Queen v Churag 12 W R Cr 5, Queen Empress v Shidlingappa Rat Un Cr C 844, Reg v Chatur 1 B 476 N. Jamiruddin v Emperor 29 C 782 Queen Empress v Bipin, 10 C 970, Nazigadu v Emperor 12 Cr L J 240=10 Ind Cas 289 Hulba v King Emperor, 4 Ind Crs 884=12 O C 418=11 Cr L J 71, Queen v Kalla Chand 11 W R Cr 21.

Although s 114 illustration (b), provides that a Court may presume that the evidence of an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless corroborated "may" is not "must" and no decision of Court can make it "must". Therefore in spite of all that has been said to the contrary in law, the evidence of an accomplice stands on the same footing as any other evidence. The Court is not obliged to hold that he is unworthy to consider after taking into consideration all the circumstances—one of which being that he is an accomplice—whether it does or does not rely on the evidence. To entirely rule out the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice might in many cases lead to miscarriage of justice Emperor v Mathews, A I R 1929 Cnl 822.

Judge's duty in charging the jury In Rex v Basherville, (1916) 2 K B 658=86 L J K B 23, Lord Reading in delivering the judgment of the Court said "There is no doubt that the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law—see Rex v Atwood 1 Leach C C 464. But it has long been a rule of practice at common law for the Judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice or accomplices, and in the discretion of the Judge to advise them not to convict upon such evidence, but the Judge should point out to jury that it is within their legal province to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence—Reg v Stubbs, 25 L J M C 16 and Mennier In re 63 L J M C 193=(1894) 2 Q B 415. This rule of practice has become virtually equivalent to a rule of law, and since the Court of Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, 17 Edw 7 C (23) came into operation this Court has held that in the absence of such a warning by the Judge the conviction must be quashed—Rex v Tate 77 L J K B 1043=(1908) 2 K B 603. If after the proper caution by the Judge the jury nevertheless convict the prisoner this Court will not quash the conviction merely upon

S 133. the ground that the accomplice's testimony was uncorroborated. It can but rarely happen that the jury would convict in such circumstances. In considering whether or not the conviction should stand this Court will review all the facts of the case and will bear in mind that the jury had the opportunity of hearing and seeing the witnesses when giving their testimony. As the rule of practice at common law was founded originally upon the exercise of the discretion of the Judge at the trial and moreover, as it is anomalous in its nature, in as much as it requires confirmation of the testimony of a competent witness it is not surprising that this rule should have led to the differences of opinion as to the nature and extent of the corroboration required, although there are propositions of law applicable to corroboration which are beyond controversy. The Legislature intended to lay down in section 114 of the Evidence Act, the rule that the testimony of an accomplice is unworthy of credit so far as it implicates an accused person unless it is corroborated in material particulars in respect of that person, and it is the duty of a Court which has to deal with an accomplice's testimony to consider whether this maxim applies to exclude that testimony or not and in a case tried by jury to draw the attention of the jury to the principles relating to the reception of an accomplice's testimony. Queen v Sadhu Mandal, 21 W R Cr 69. The Judge should inform the jury or assessors (1) that there is no rule of law prohibiting the conviction of an offender upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice (2) that as a general rule of practice it is considered unsafe to convict upon such evidence and (3) to point out any circumstances in the particular case which in the opinion of the Judge afford a sufficient reason for relying upon the evidence. 2 Wm 798=4 M H C App 7. The evidence of accomplices should not be left to a jury without such directions and observations from the Judge as the circumstances of the case may require. In re Elahi Bux 5 W R Cr 80=B L R Sup Vol 459. Where the evidence of an accomplice is uncorroborated the correct practice requires Sessions Judges not merely to tell the jury that it is unusual to convict on such evidence but also to tell them that it is unsafe and contrary both to prudence and practice to do so. But his omission to state the above particulars does not amount to an error in law. Reg v Gaun Bin, 6 B H C Cr 57 see also In re Palavasam 2 Wm 796. If the jury found a prisoner guilty on the uncorroborated evidence of an approver after the Judge in his summing up had pointed out to them the deirability, under the circumstances of such corroboration, the High Court on appeal would refuse to set aside the conviction. Queen v Mahima 6 B L R App 108=15 W R Cr 37. But where a Session Judge has failed to warn a jury that it is unsafe to convict merely upon the testimony of the approver and where the Judge has not properly explained to the jury the law and practice regarding such cases there is a misdirection of a very serious kind and the verdict of the jury cannot be sustained. Mahbul v Emperor 12 Cr L J 37=12 Ind C's 513. The Judge in his charge to the jury should take care to state also that the evidence of approver was given on conditional pardon. Queen v Bykunt 10 W R Cr 17. It will be an error in summing up if a Judge after pointing out the danger of acting upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice were to tell the jury that the evidence of the accomplice was corroborated by a fact which did not amount to any corroboration at all. Jamruddi v Emperor, 29 C 782=6 C W N 553. The evidence of an approver should not be believed without material corroboration, and in order to see whether there is such a corroboration it is the duty of the Court to scrutinize and marshall out very carefully the proof relating thereto. Where this duty has not been properly performed by the lower Court, the High Court will interfere on the revision side and set aside even the concurrent findings of the Courts below. Manna v Emperor 9 Ind C's 232=12 Cr L J 35=3 P W R 1911. Queen v Elchee Bux 5 W R Cr 80 (F B). Jani Ram v Emperor 107 Ind Cas 576=29 Cr L J 311=A I R 1928 Oudh 207.

Conviction whether illegal for want of corroboration. A conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice such evidence, being inadmissible, furnishes no good legal basis for a conviction as any other evidence which is admissible. The omission to follow the established rule of practice as to the corroboration of such evidence does not constitute an error in law. But where the character of the evidence relied upon by the prosecution was not of a kind to warrant the refusal of the Judge to apply to the case the maxim enunciated in illustration (b) of s. 114, Evidence Act, a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is not legal. Queen Empress v Changan Dayaram, 14 B 331. Mauludin v Emperor, 53 Ind Cis 46. See also Queen Empress v Nga Tun U B R (1897 1901) Vol I 173, Itah Balsh v Emperor, 16 P R 1836 Cr, Itah v King Emperor, 14 Ind Cas 968. Nga Po Chit v Emperor 9 Ind Cas 778=12 Cr L J 132, Lalan Stahl v King Emperor, 16 C W N 669=15 Ind Cis 987=13 Cr L J 570. Emperor v Lalubhai, 11 Bom L R 858=3 Ind Cis 963=10 Cr L J 133, Queen Empress v Ningappa 2 Bom L R 610. This section in an unmistakable terms lays it down that a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and to hold that corroboration is necessary is to refuse to give effect to this provision. Reg v Ramasami, 1 M 394=2 Weir 799. Queen v Luckniece 19 W R Cr 48, Itah Balsh v Emperor 5 W R Cr 80=B L R Sup Vol 459. The rule regarding the evidence of accomplices is that it must be carefully scrutinized before it is accepted. In dealing with such evidence a Judge or jury must start with the rules stated in illustration (b) to section 114, Evidence Act, and presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. There may be circumstances in particular cases which are sufficient to overcome such presumption and, in such cases, a conviction is not illegal. Such cases are provided for by section 133 Evidence Act, but, in the case of a Judge who has to give reasons for his decision, the reasons which had led him to believe the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice should be clearly and fully set out. The evidence of one accomplice is ordinarily not sufficient corroboration of that of another. Nga Po Thet v Queen Empress 1 L B R 29. Though, before convicting on the evidence of an accomplice, corroboration is not legally necessary, a Court should follow the maxim that an accomplice is unworthy of credit if not corroborated in material particulars unless circumstances justifying a disregard of such maxim exist. Itah Balsh v Emperor, 16 P R 1836 Cr. It is generally unsafe to convict an accused person on the testimony of an accomplice unless it is corroborated in material particulars connecting the accused with the offence. But in considering whether this rule applies to any particular case, it must be remembered that all persons technically within the category of accomplice cannot be treated precisely on the same footing and no general rule on the subject can be laid down. Deo Vandon v Emperor, 33 C 649=10 C W N 669=3 Cr L J 452. It is not a rule of law but one of practice as to the corroboration of accomplice who is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. The High Court will not disturb a conviction under its revisional jurisdiction, simply because this rule of practice has not been observed by the convicting Court, unless there are exceptional circumstances calling for the exercise of that jurisdiction in the interests of justice. Emperor v Lalit, 11 Bom L R 848=3 Ind Cas 963=10 Cr L J 433. Where the evidence of an accomplice is not of a character to warrant the refusal of a Court to apply to it the maxim enunciated in illustration (b) of section 114, Evidence Act a conviction based on such evidence alone would be of questionable propriety. Queen Empress v Chagan, 14 B 331. A conviction on an uncorroborated and retracted confession of an accomplice is improper and bad. Yasin v King Emperor 28 C 689=5 C W N 670. A prisoner should not be convicted on the sole and uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice who was made a witness after a pardon was granted to him. Queen v Nunho, 9 W R Cr 28. Queen Empress v Bhagya, Rat Un Cr C 750. see also Queen v Chutterdharce, 5 W R Cr 53, Queen v Baulun 3 B L R F B 2 note.

The law on this point was thoroughly discussed by Sir Barnes Peacock C J in Q v Elahi Bux, 5 W R Cr 80=B L R Sub Vol (F B). That case was decided in 1866 and in stating the law he said: "I am of opinion that a conviction upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is legal. This is not a new law, nor founded upon a new principle. The point was decided

S 133. in England as far back as the 10th December 1662, after conference with all the Judges" Then quoting extracts from Sir Matthew Hale's Pleas of the Crown, King v Atwood, 1 Leach Cr C 461, King v Jones 2 Camp Rep 131 and from King v Dathom, 1 Leach Cr C 178, he continued "The law is above laid down that a conviction is legal though supported by uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice has been admitted by Lord Denham in Rex v Hastings and another 7 C & P 132, by Baron Alderson in Rex v Wilkes, 7 C & P 272 and by many other learned and eminent Judges and it was so ruled by the Court of Criminal Appeal in Reg v Stuffs, 25 L J M 16. The law of England, therefore, upon this subject is beyond doubt. The law of America is the same, and in that country where in most of the states new trials are granted in criminal cases, new trials have been refused even when the verdicts were obtained upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice.

Act II of 1855 section 28, was referred to by the appellant's pleader, by whom the case was very ably argued and it was contended that that Act rendered corroboration necessary upon that point it is sufficient to say that it was not the intention of the Act to render inadmissible any evidence, which but for the Act would have been admissible (see section 58), nor was it intended to lessen the legal effect of any such evidence. We have therefore no hesitation in answering the first question in the affirmative and declaring that a conviction may be legally had on the uncorroborated evidence of one or more accomplices."

Amount of corroboration A conviction based on the totally uncorroborated story of an accomplice is bad in law. Queen Empress v Shidlingappa Rat Un Cr C 844 Crown v Heero Mahar, 74 P R 1866 Cr Crown v Motum 11 P R 1867 Cr Ator v Queen Empress U B R (1892-1896) Vol I 103. An approver's evidence cannot be accepted unless it is corroborated in material particulars by other independent evidence. Lad Khan v Crown 19 P W R 1912 Cr = 13 Ind Cas 998 = 13 Cr L J 182 = 17 P I R 1912 Queen Empress v Arishno Bhat 10 B 319, P S Narayan v Emperor (1914) M W N 363 = 15 Cr L J 417 = 24 Ind Cas 153. Not only as to the persons spoken of by an accomplice must there be corroborative evidence, but also as to the corpus delicti there must be some prima facie evidence pointing to the same direction. Reg v Chatur, Rat Un Cr C 102 = Cr Rg 171 1876. There must be independent corroboration with respect to the identification of the persons whom accomplices charge and with respect to the facts they state and their testimony ought to be confirmed by other evidence against each person they name. Gundo Singh v Crown 21 P R 1866 Cr, Esur Singh v Crown 1 P R 1868 Cr. The testimony of an accomplice is not alone sufficient for a conviction. The corroboration must be on matters directly connecting the prisoner with the offence of which he is accused. Queen v Dwarka, 5 W R Cr 18 = 1 Ind Jur N S 100 Queen Empress v Dhondi Rat Un Cr C 840, Queen Empress v Kunjon Menon 1 M L J 397, Queen Empress v Shidlingappa, Rat Un Cr C 844. The evidence of two or more accomplices requires corroboration equally with the testimony of one. Queen v Dwarka 5 W R Cr 18 = 1 Ind Jur N S 100 Queen Empress v Shidlingappa, Rat Un Cr C 844 Nga Paw v Q E, L B R (1872 1892) 54. An accomplice is a competent witness and there is no absolute rule of law which enacts that the conviction on the evidence of an accomplice is bad but there is an established practice, founded on the judicial experience of generations which requires corroborations by some untainted evidence and that in a material particular pointing not only to the crime but to the participation of the accused in that crime. Siar Noma v King Emperor, 18 C W N 350 = 15 Cr L J 438 = 24 Ind Cas 174. The English practice should be followed as to the amount of corroboration required to support the evidence of an accomplice. According to such practice when the accomplice speaks as to two or more persons having been concerned in the same offence, his testimony should be confirmed not only as to the circumstances of the case, but also as to the identity of the prisoners and any prisoner as to whom his testimony is not supported should be acquitted. Reg v Imam Valad, 3 B H C Cr 57. In dealing with the question what amount of corroboration is required in the case of testimony given by an accomplice, the Court must exercise careful discrimination and look at all the surrounding circumstances in order to arrive at a conclusion, whether the facts deposed to by the person alleged to be an accomplice are borne out by those circumstances, or whether the circumstances are of such a nature that the evidence purporting to be given by the alleged accomplice should be supported in essential and material particulars by evidence abundant as to the facts deposed to by that accomplice. The amount of criminality is a matter for consideration and when a person is only an accomplice by implication or in a secondary sense, his evidence does not require the same amount of corroboration as that of a person who is an actual perpetrator with the principal offender. Although a conviction is not illegal, merely, because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, the evidence of an accomplice, ordinarily speaking, should be corroborated in material particulars, and such evidence should be accepted with a great deal of caution and scrutiny. Kamala Prasad v Sital Prasad, 5 C W N 517=28 C 339. The corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice when required, should be such corroboration in material particulars as would induce a prudent man, on the consideration of all the circumstances, to believe that the evidence is true, not only as to the narrative of the offence committed, but also so far as it affects each person thereby implicated. Emperor v Srinivas Krishna 7 Bom L R 969=3 Or L J 33. Banu Singh v King Emperor, 10 C W N 962=4 Or L J 145=33 C 1353. Previous statements made by the accomplice himself, though consistent with the evidence given by him at the trial are insufficient for the corroboration of the evidence of the accomplice. The evidence requisite for the corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice must proceed from an independent and reliable source. Reg v Malappa Bui, 11 B H O A C 196. The confession of one of the prisoners cannot be used to corroborate the evidence of an accomplice against the others. Reg v Malappa, 11 B H O A C 196, Sheikh Sherov v Emperor, 81 Ind Cas 898=20 Or L J 1067. Tainted evidence is not made better by being corroborated by other tainted evidence. Queen v Bayoo 25 W R Or 43, Hakam Singh v Emperor, A I R 1929 Lah 80=1929 Cr O 626, Queen v Ramsaran, 8 A 306=A W N 1855, 311, Queen v Duanka, 5 W R Or 18, Mahomed Usuf v Emperor, 114 Ind Cas 457=A I R 1929 Nag 215.

The rule laid down in s 114, illustration (b) corresponds with the rule observed in England. Reg v Ramasami, 1 M 394=2 Weir 799. It is unsafe to convict a person on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Queen Empress v Imdad 8 A. 120=A W N 1886, 7, Maung Lay v Emperor 77 Ind Cas 429. The initial presumption is that the evidence of accomplices is unworthy of credit and it is reliable only where there are any special circumstances that rebut this presumption and leave no reasonable doubt that the evidence of the accomplice is worthy of belief. Nga Wa v King Emperor, 1 U B R (1902 1903) Evidence 1.

The law as expressed in ss 114(b) and 133 of the Evidence Act is in no respect different from the law of England, but simply reproduces a rule of practice viz that a conviction based on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is not illegal, that is it is not unlawful. But experience teaches that it is not safe to rely upon the evidence of an accomplice, unless it is corroborated, and hence, it is the practice of the Judges, both in England and in India, when sitting alone to guard their minds carefully against acting upon such evidence when uncorroborated and, when trying a case with a jury, to warn them that such a course is unsafe. Not only it is necessary that evidence should be corroborated in material particulars but the corroboration should extend to the identity of the accused person. There must be some corroboration independent of the accomplice or of the accomplice and the confessing prisoner to show that the party accused was actually engaged directly in the commission of the crime charged against him. It is of no value and makes no difference if there are two accomplices. A second accomplice does not improve the position of the first, nor does the fact that there are two make it unnecessary that both should be corroborated. The accomplice must be corroborated not only as to one but as to all of the persons affected by the evidence, corroboration of his evidence as to one prisoner would not justify his evidence against another being accepted without corroboration. Queen Empress v Ram Saran 8A 306 = A W N 1885, 31, Emperor v Jamal ditto, 1C 160 = 28 C W N 536. If some part of his evidence is satisfactorily corroborated, there is good ground for believing him in other parts in which there is no corroboration. Queen Empress v Kunyan Menon, 1 M L J 397 (F B).

S 133

The evidence of an accomplice requires to be accepted with a great deal of caution and scrutiny, because among other things, he is likely to swear falsely in order to shift the guilt from himself. But this consideration hardly applies to the evidence of one, who testifies that he has bribed the accused, for, by his own testimony so far from shifting the offence from himself he, in fact thereby fastens it upon himself, for it is by making himself out to be a briber that he shows another has been bribed. Emperor v Shirnas, 7 Bom L R 969 = 3 Cr L J 33.

Where a witness admits that he was cognizant of the crime as to which he testifies and took no means to prevent or disclose it his evidence must be considered as no better than that of an accomplice and consequently requires corroboration. Queen v Chando, 24 W R 55 Cr. The rule that an accomplice unless corroborated by evidence other than that of another accomplice, is unworthy of belief, applies to persons to whom a pardon has been tendered on condition of their making a full disclosure of all the circumstances of the crime in which they profess themselves to have been participants and subject to the penalty of being themselves placed upon their trial if, in the opinion of the Court they have spoken falsely or kept back anything important. It does not apply to a case in which the question is as to the degree of reliance to be placed upon the evidence of the accomplices who have been convicted of the offence and have undergone the full term of imprisonment inflicted upon them for their share in it. The evidence of such witnesses if corroborated by the statements made by them at the time of their trial, is good corroborative evidence under s 157 of the Evidence Act. Empress v Fania Bhat 4 O P L R 1.

As regards the nature of the corroboration required to convict a person on the testimony of an accomplice it must be confirmatory of some of the leading circumstances of the story of the approver as against the particular prisoner. Facts, which do not show the connection of the prisoner with the commission of the offence with which he is charged, are no corroboration in the sense in which the word is used in such cases, although they may tend to show that certain portions of what the accomplice says is true. Courts ought not to convict upon an accomplice's testimony unless it is confirmed not only as to the offence, but as to the identity of the individual prisoner as the person or one of the persons, who participated in the offence. Jamuruddin v Emperor 29 C 783 = 6 C W N 553, Ghulam v Crown, 33 Ind Cis 352 Ire Muthan Papayya 4 Ind Cas 391. Reg v Imam, 3 B H C R Cr 57. Queen Empress v Baldeo, 8 A 509 = A W N 1886, 176. Narayan v Emperor, 2 Mys L J 11. Reg v Badhu 1 B 47. Where there are more than one accused persons there must be corroboration against each of the accused showing his connection with the offence alleged against him. Nifa v Crown 19 P W R 1961 Cr = 33 Ind Cis 636. section 133 of the Evidence Act contains the rule of law section 114 illustration (b) being merely a sort of guidance to assist the Courts. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to when and to what extent an accomplice must be corroborated. The reasons why an accomplice's evidence is to be viewed with suspicion may be summarised as follows—(1) because he has a motive to shift guilt from himself, (2) because he is an immoral person likely to commit perjury on occasion, (3) because he hopes for pardon or has secured it and so favours the prosecution. Bakul Ali v Crown 2 P R 1917 Cr = 36 Ind Cas 86. Nand Singh v Crown 9 P W R 1917 Cr.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down either that in no case should an approver's evidence be rejected as regards a particular incident simply because on that point it happens to be uncorroborated, or that, in every case, regardless of all other facts and considerations, an approver's evidence must be thrown aside as worthless unless it is corroborated by independent evidence of a trustworthy character. Dichanta v The Crown, 7 P W R 1916 Cr = 32 Ind Cas

833, see also Balmol und v. Crown, 28 Ind Cas 738 The evidence tending to show that the co accused or some of them were seen in the company of the approver at or in the vicinity of the places at which he says dacoities were committed, is not sufficient corroboration in support of his statement Wayam v The Crown, 3 P W R 1916 Cr = 17 Cr L J 107 = 33 Ind Cas 843

A conviction based on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver is illegal Gurdi Singh v Crown, 52 P L R 1918 = 41 Ind Cas 967 = 19 Cr L J 439, Pan Gang v Emperor, 42 Ind Cas 1002 = 19 Cr L J 47

The retracted confession of an accused person may be sufficient corroboration of the approver's story as against himself but not against a co accused Patla v Emperor, 12 P W R Cr 1913 = 49 Ind Cas 604 = 20 Cr L J 188, In re Danur Veerabada, 13 L W 385 = 61 Ind Cas 528

The approver's evidence is in itself tainted evidence though in some cases it may be of belief for various reasons The uncorroborated statement of an approver taken at the end of the trial is of no value whatever Sundar Singh v Emperor, 56 Ind Cas 667 = 21 Cr L J 507, see also Fatta v Emperor 3 Lah L J 296 An accused cannot be convicted unless the Judge is satisfied that the evidence of the accomplice was corroborated in some material and satisfactory manner Dhanu v Emperor 2 Pat L T 757 Where the corroboration was the recovery of certain articles, alleged to be some of the articles stolen and subsequently produced from the house of the accused his house was searched in his absence and he was given no opportunity of checking the results of the search for giving any explanation as to how the articles came into that house and there was no evidence as to where the respective ornaments were found, nor was anything said as to who produced them In the circumstances it was held that there was no sufficient corroboration Saudagar Singh v Emperor, 1923 Lah 633, but see Khushal v Emperor, 1923 Lah 335

The approver referred to a story by one A who invited him along with appellants to join in the dacoity, the incident of the story told by the approver turned out to be true on police inquiry Appellants were seen with the approver at Sukho and arrested in his company at Mundra The possession of the three tickets all from Chakali to Mundra and bearing consecutive number was strong corroboration of the approver's story as to the appellants having accompanied him to the scene of the occurrence Halim v Emperor, 1923 Lah 153

The production of stolen property by an accused person even from a place which is not in his own possession may be accepted as material corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice who has deposed that the accused joined him in committing the burglary or theft Mahomed v Emperor, 111 Ind Cas 447 = 23 Cr L J 863

The testimony of a professed accomplice requires to be carefully scrutinized with anxious search for possible corroboration Macdonald v Fred Latimer, 99 L W 155 = 112 Ind Cas 875 = A I R 1929 P C 15 The well known rule of criminal law that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars is not absolute but, it is only in exceptional cases that the corroboration can be dispensed with The evidence in corroboration of the approver's evidence need not be direct evidence showing that the accused have committed the crime It is sufficient that it is merely circumstantial evidence of their connection with the crime Lale v Emperor, 118 Ind Cas 423 = 30 Cr I J 922 = A I R 1929 Oudh 321 The mere presence of a person in the house is not a corroboration Abol v Emperor, 1929 M W N 698 An approver is unworthy of credit unless corroborated in material particulars Where the only witness who corroborated him was his son aged 7 years who parrot like repeated what he had been tutored to say, it is unsafe to convict the accused on such evidence Meher Singh v Crown 11 Lah L J 224 = 30 P L R 422 = A I R 1929 Lah 287

Corroboration need not necessarily consist of direct evidence that the accused committed the crime it is sufficient even if it consists of circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime R v Basherville, (1916) 2 K B 68 Hakam Singh v Emperor, A I R 1929 Lah 850 R v Marks, (1919) 1 K B 421 The extent of corroboration which a Court demands naturally

S 134 varies with the circumstances of each case, including the character and incidents of the approver and the degree of suspicion attached to his evidence Hakim Singh v Emperor, A I R 1929 Lah 850

In deciding a criminal case with reference to the evidence of an accomplice the Court must take into consideration the maxim that it is unsafe to convict a person upon the evidence of an accomplice unless he is corroborated in material particulars both as to the circumstances of the offence and the identity of the person whom he implicates Lady Mohar v Emperor, 114 Ind Cas 623=A I R 1929 Nag 222=30 Cr L J 331, see also Mahomed v Emperor, 114 Ind Cas 457=30 Cr L J 311=A I R 1929 Nag 215, Sundaram v Emperor 1929 M W N 794, Mahomed Usaf v Emperor 114 Ind Cas 457=30 Cr L J 311=A I R 1929 Nag 215 Musa v Emperor 114 Ind Cas 609=A I R 1929 Nag 233=30 Cr L J 333, Hakim Singh v Emperor, A I R 1929 Lah 850 Monohar v Emperor, A I R 1930 Cal 430, Sheo Bahas v Emperor, A I R 1930 Pat 164

It is the main duty of the prosecution to bring the accomplice character of the evidence to the notice of the Court and then invite it to believe it by reference to the corroborative evidence on record Mahomed Usuf v Emperor, 114 Ind Cas 457=30 Cr L J 311=A I R 1929 Nag 215 The foremost essential condition for accepting the approver's statement is that it must be trustworthy Lodha v Emperor, 114 Ind Cas 623=30 Cr L J 331=A I R 1929 Nag 222,

134 No particular number of witnesses shall in any case be required for the proof of any fact

Principle 'And after all, what is it worth?' said Jeremy Bentham in his Rationale of Judicial Evidence, B IX pt VI C 1 § 1, 'In the multitude of counsellors says, the proverb, there is safety in the multitude of witnesses there may be some sort of safety, but nothing more, it is by weight, full as much as by tale, that witnesses are to be judged Pundere non numero From numbers (the particulars of the case out of the question) no just conclusion can be formed Nothing can be weaker than the best security that can be derived from numbers In many cases a single witness, by the simplicity and clearness of his narrative, by the probability and consistency of the incidents he relates, by their agreement with other matters of fact too notorious to stand in need of testimony—a single witness (especially if situation and character be taken into account) will be enough to stamp conviction on the most reluctant mind In other instances, a cloud of witnesses though all were to the same fact, will be found wanting in the balance There is no man, conversant with the business of the bar whose experience has not presented him with instances of dozens of witnesses opposed to each other in the same cause, line against line, and whose testimony has been of such a nature that (howsoever it may have been in regard to mendacity) falsehood must have been on one side or the other

I do not mean to insinuate (it would be absurdity to insinuate) that the requisition of a second witness adds nothing to the security against perjury No doubt but that, the greater the number of witnesses you require, the greater the security against perjury All I contend for is that that security, (be it greater or less) is not so necessary as that you should pay so great a price for it, as you do pay, and must pay by the licence you thereby grant to commit the crime in the presence and with the aid of anyone 'Reason', says Montesquieu, 'requires two witnesses because a witness who affirms and a party accused who denies make a serious assertion, and it requires a third to turn the scale Thus, by way of proof of the proposition immediately preceding 'The laws which civilize man to punish upon the deposition of a single witness are fatal to liberty' This observation short as it is, teems with errors fatal to liberty? What means liberty? What can be concluded from a proposition, one of the terms of which is so vague? What my own meaning, I know and I hope the reader knows it too Security is the political blessing I have in view, security as against malefactors, on one hand, security as against the instruments of Government, on the other Security, in both these branches of it, is the benefit, the making due provision for which, in the case in question, is the object of these inquiries. Where two witnesses have been required, the principle of determination is obvious enough it has been the fear of giving birth to the conviction and punishment of innocent persons, if in each case the testimony of a single witness were held sufficient. Engrossed by the view of this danger, the attention has overlooked the so much greater danger on the other side.

The giving security to the innocent is the object and final cause of this ill considered scruple of what description of the innocent? Of those, and those alone, to whom, by false testimony, it might happen to be subjected to prosecution in a Court of Justice. On the other hand, those to whom in consequence of the license granted by this same rule it might happen and (if the rule were universally known) could not but happen, to suffer the same or worse punishment at the hands of malefactors, are altogether overlooked. The innocent who scarcely present themselves by so much as scores or dozens, engross the whole attention, and pass for the whole world. The innocent who ought to have presented themselves by millions, are overlooked, and left out of the account. So also commenting on the saying that the evidence of a single witness is "fatal to liberty" Mr W D Evans in his notes on Pothier II, 231 said 'It might perhaps be said with greater justice that the absolute and indiscriminate exclusion of a single witness in every capital case would if not fatal at least be dangerous to security—as the opportunity of a solitary situation would enable a miscreant to perpetuate a robbery or a rape with impunity, however respectable the character of the person who suffered the violence, and however assured by previous knowledge of the identity of the defendant. His supposed equality between the denial of the accused and the testimony of the witness is merely fanciful, unless it can be asserted that there is an equal inducement to make a false accusation for the purpose of destroying an individual with whom there is no previous animosity, and to deny the commission of a crime for which a party is justly liable to undergo punishment,—between (as I have seen it observed in a publication of Mr Christian) a person who by his falsehood has everything to lose and nothing to gain, and one who has everything to gain and nothing to lose."

Mr Best says 'We have said that this rule is a distinguishing feature in our common law system. The Mosiac law in some cases and the civilians and canonists in all exacted the evidence of more than one witness,—a doctrine adopted by most nations of Europe and by the ecclesiastical and some other tribunals among us. As might naturally be expected, much has been said and written, and the most opposite views have prevailed, on the merits of the different systems. Those who take the civil law view contend that it is dangerous to allow a tribunal to act on the testimony of a single witness, since by this means any person, even the most vile, can swear away the liberty, honour, or life of any one else, they insist on the undoubted truth, that the chance of discrepancy between the statements of two false witnesses, when examined apart, is a powerful protection to the party attacked. Now we are by no means prepared to deny that under a system where the decision of all questions of law and fact is entrusted to a single Judge, or in a country where the standard of truth among the population is very low, such a rule may be a valuable security against the abuse of power and the risk of perjury, but it is far otherwise where a high standard of truth prevails, and facts are tried by a jury directed and assisted by a Judge. Add to this, that the anomaly of acting on the testimony of one person is more apparent than real, for the decision does not proceed solely on the story told by the witness, but on the moral conviction of its truth, based on its intrinsic probability and his manner of giving his evidence. And there are few cases in which the decision rests even on these circumstances alone, they are usually corroborated by the presumption arising from the absence of counterproof or explanation, and in criminal cases by the demeanour of the accused while on his trial. On the other hand however, as the requiring a plurality of witnesses clearly imposes an obstacle to the administration of justice, especially where the act to be proved is of a casual nature,—above all, where being in

S. 134. violation of law, as much clandestinity as possible would be observed,—it ought not to be required without strong and just reason. Its evils are these: 1. It offers a premium to crime and dishonesty by telling the murderer and felon that they may escape their guilt, and the knave that he may practice his fraud, with impunity in the presence of any one person, and the unprincipled man that he may safely violate any engagement, however solemn contracted under similar circumstances. 2. Artificial rules of this kind hold out a temptation to the subornation of perjury, in order to obtain the means of complying with them. 3. They produce a mischievous effect on the tribunal, by their natural tendency to rest on the human mind, and they thus create a system of mechanical decision dependent on the number of proofs, and regardless of their weight. On the whole we trust our readers will agree with us in thinking that any attempt to lay down a universal rule on this subject which shall be applicable to all countries, ages and causes, is ridiculous, and that although so far as this country is concerned, the general rule of the common law—that judicial decisions should proceed on intelligence and credit, and not on the number of the witnesses examined or documents produced in evidence—is a just one, there are cases where, from motives of public policy it has been wisely ordained otherwise. Bert Ev §§ 597-601, Wigmore § 2033. 'What we must conclude then is that our whole presumption should be against any specific rule requiring a number of witnesses or corroboration of a single witness, that such arbitrary measurements are likely to be of little real efficiency and to introduce disadvantages greater than those which they purport to avoid, and that therefore any such rule when advanced for a specific use—for example treason or perjury—or for a specific witness—for example an accomplice or a rape complainant—must justify itself by experience as overwhelmingly useful and efficacious.' Wigmore § 2033.

Scope of the section. Section 28 of Act II of 1855 enacted "Except in cases of treason the direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit shall be sufficient for proof of any fact in any such Court or before any such person. But this provision shall not affect any rule or practice of any Court that requires corroborative evidence in support of the testimony of an accomplice or of a single witness in the case of perjury. So far as the offences of treason and perjury were concerned Act II of 1855 followed the English law (Vide Taylor §§ 952-959). In this connection Mr Goodere says "Thus in a prosecution either for treason or misprison for treason, the offence is required to be established 'on the testimony of not less than two witnesses. This is a statutory provision of the reign of William III and requires the oath of either two witnesses to the same overt act or one to one and the other to another overt act of the same transaction unless the accused should willingly without violence in open Court confess it. The Act was passed in jealous protection of the subject against the supposed power and influence of the Crown and, with a merciful and just consideration of the weighty consequences involved in a conviction of the crime. The rule however addressed itself only to the treasonable transaction itself. It would not embrace any collateral or incidental matter not being part of the act or treason even though part of the general proof—as for instance, in an indictment for adherence to the Queen's enemies proof that the accused was a subject of the Crown. In the case of an indictment for perjury the perjury could only be established on either the testimony of two supporting witnesses or of one equivalent to it,—as in a suit in equity a decree could not be had against the positive statements of the answer on the testimony of a single witness only. In both cases it would be only the setting of one oath against the other. Goodere Ev pp 502-503 see also R v Lal Chand 5 W R Cr 23 R v Bhal Cree 5 W R Cr 98, R v Hoss 6 M H C R 342.

Now by this section that restriction even has been removed. Now a conviction upon the statement of a complainant is lawful. Khulam v Bhouni prosad 22 W R 32 Cr. This section declares that no particular number of witnesses shall, in any case be required for the proof of any fact. Ibid see also Raja Prosonno v Romonee 10 W R 236, Gorindo v Narain, 24 W R Cr 18.

In Queen Empress v Ghulel, 7 A 44 at p 50 Duthoit J said "R v Harris, 5 B & A 926, has been followed in Mary Jackson's case, 1 Lew Cr C 270, in R v Wheatland, 8 C & P 238, in R v Hook, 15 D & R and in other cases As regards all these cases I would remark generally that the law of England is to the necessity of calling at least two witnesses to support an accusation of perjury, and of showing that the oath taken was material to the question of depending, is not law in India"

S 135

CHAPTER X

OF THE EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES

135 The order in which witnesses are produced and examined shall be regulated by the law and practice for the time being relating to civil and criminal procedure respectively, and, in the absence of any such law, by the discretion of the Court

Order of production and examination of witnesses

Attendance of witnesses This chapter deals with the examination of the witnesses, by incorporating the rules of English law on the subject. The only addition is section 165 which empowers the Judge to put questions. It frequently happens that the parties do not, in their questions, elicit all the facts necessary to a sound view of the merits of the case. He may also ask the parties to produce any documents. This chapter does not lay down any rules as regards the production of witnesses or documents before the Court. The Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes incorporate rules on these subjects. Provisions have been made in the Indian Penal Code for disobeying the process of a competent Court. The duty of citizens to appear and testify to such facts, within their knowledge, is may be necessary to the due administration of justice is one which has been recognized and enforced by the common law from an early period. Anny v Long 9 East 473. The process by which this writ is enforced is the subpoena ad testificandum commonly called subpoena, which commands the witness to appear at the trial to give his testimony. It is a writ or order directed to a person and requiring his attendance at a particular time and place to testify as a witness. It may also require him to bring with him any books or documents or other things under his control which he is bound by law to produce in evidence. The right to compel the attendance of witnesses was an incident to the jurisdiction of the Common Law Courts and statutes generally exist extending this power to other officers, such as referees, arbitrators and the like. Burr Jones § 797. Either party to a suit has a right to a process of Court to secure the attendance of witness to testify in his behalf in any judicial proceeding. By an early English Statute, witnesses were entitled to their reasonable costs and charges. 5 Eliz. C 9. In this country, the subject is generally regulated by Statute and High Court Rules which prescribe the rate of compensation for each day's attendance and the rate of mileage. It is indispensable to the due administration of justice that the Court should have the power of summarily compelling the attendance of witnesses, and "every Court, having power definitely to hear and determine any suit, has by the common law inherent power to call for all adequate proofs of the facts in controversy and, to that end, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses before it." Greenl Et 60. Section 174 of the Indian Penal Code penalises non attendance in obedience to an order from a public servant to attend at a certain place and time. So also section 175 of the Indian Penal Code punishes intentional non production of a document by a person legally bound to produce it. In England the mode of compelling attendance of a witness, who wilfully neglects to attend, is by attachment for contempt of Court. Burr Jones § 799, Cole v Haichens, Andrews 275. Childerson v Barrett, 11 East 439. The process of attachment, for these and the like complaints must necessarily be as ancient as the laws themselves. For laws without a competent authority to secure their administration from disobedience and contempt would be vain and nugatory. A power, therefore, in the supreme Courts of Justice to suppress such contempts, by an immediate attachment of the offender, results from the first principles of judicial establishments, and must be an inseparable attendant upon every superior tribunal. Accordingly, we find it actually exercised as early as the annals of our law extend."

S 135

Exclusion of witnesses from Court room Before discussing the general rules which govern the examination of witnesses it is proper to call attention to the familiar rule that the Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, direct the exclusion of witnesses from the Court room while the testimony of other witnesses is being given. Burr Jones § 807, Taylor Fr §§ 1400 1407. This is called putting or placing the witnesses under the rule and is a practice which has prevailed in the British Parliament and in the Courts of England and Scotland from an early day. Taylor § 1042. The object of such an order is obviously to elicit the truth by securing testimony not influenced by the statements of other witnesses or the suggestions of counsel as well as to prevent collusion and covert testimony among witnesses. While this order will generally be made by the Court on the application of counsel, before the examination of the witnesses it is generally held to be a matter of discretion rather than of strict right, yet in some States it may be claimed as a right. Burr Jones § 807. Parties to the litigation except for some impropriety will not generally be excluded, since their presence is usually necessary to a proper management of their case. Nor will an attorney for one of the parties be excluded. The same is true of one who is a party in interest, though not a party to the record and also of an agent of the party when presence of such agent is necessary, as when the agent has gained such familiarity with the facts that his presence is necessary for the proper management of the action or defence. The mere fact of the necessity for the presence of such an agent will not outweigh the right of the Court to the exercise of its discretion. Expert witnesses are not generally excluded until the evidence be given upon the question or subject as to which they are called. But if there is any reason to apprehend that the expert witnesses are liable to be influenced by the testimony of other witnesses they should be treated in the same manner. In order to make the order effective the Court may order the witnesses to be kept separate while others are being examined, in order that they may not communicate with each other. Burr Jones § 807.

The consequences of the violation of an order of the Court were at first very stringent and disastrous to the party. Later it was held to be a matter of judicial discretion whether his testimony should be received. Cobbet v Hudson 1 El & Bl 11=22 L J Q B 13. But in England it is now held that the Judge has no right to reject the witness on this ground. Chandler v Horne, 2 Moo & R 423. Cool v Nethercote 6 Car & P 743. His remaining in the Court room in violation of said rule might, however, be used in discrediting him as a witness, and subject him to a reprimand by the Court and punishment for contempt, but it would not render him incompetent as a witness. The jury has a right to hear his evidence and pass upon its weight and credibility. Price v United States 1 Oll Cr 291. Burr Jones § 808.

Scope of the section This section lays down that the Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes should be guides as regards the orders of production and examination of witnesses. In the absence of any such provision in the Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes by the discretion of the Court. In this connection Prof Greenleaf says "The subject lies chiefly to the discretion of the Judge before whom the case is tried, it being, from its very nature susceptible of but few positive and stringent rules. The great object is to elicit the truth from the witness but the character, intelligence moral courage bias, memory and other circumstances of witnesses are so various as to require almost equal variety in the manner of interrogation, and the degree of its intensity to attain that end." Greenleaf Ev § 21. The Judge must necessarily be invested with a wide discretion in regard to ordering or permitting an alteration of the ordinary rules of practice and procedure at trials and the time and order in which the evidence shall be introduced. These rules are always subject to be modified in their application to particular cases at the discretion of the Judge Buri Jones § 809 While counsel has discretion, the Court has also power under this section to direct the order in which witnesses are called by a party shall be examined. In the goods of Gopeson Dutta 16 C W N 265=39 C 245 In Kedar Nath Ghosh v. Bhupendra Nath Bose, 5 C W N XV, at the close of the examination in chief of the plaintiff's attorney, who was the first witness called Mr Jackson referring to section 135 of the Evidence Act asked that the cross examination of the witness be deferred, until after the examination in-chief of the plaintiff by his counsel submitting that the word 'examined' includes cross examination. In rejecting the prayer of the counsel, Stanley J said 'The Court is very slow to interfere with the discretion of counsel as to the order in which witnesses should be examined. I think that in the present case the ordinary practice should regulate the order of examination, and that the witness should be cross-examined at the conclusion of the examination in chief.' It is not the duty of the Court to direct the parties as to the manner in which the defendant is to lead his witnesses. Lakshmi Chand v. Mukta Parshad, 8 Ian L J 67=92 Ind Cas 1006=27 P L R 136

It is a further illustration of the discretionary control of the trial Judge over the conduct of the trial and the examination of witnesses that he may determine whether a witness may be recalled and examined subsequently to his first examination. This is frequently made necessary by facts arising from the cross-examination of other witnesses or by reason of inadvertence or from other causes and is allowed in the sound discretion of the Court, although other proceedings have intervened. While the discretion is sometimes too indulgently exercised in allowing such recall, the appellate Court will not interfere where the request is allowed or refused unless the discretion is clearly absurd. This is especially true where the discretion is exercised in favour of the re-examination. And where permission has been given to recall a witness to whom counsel had omitted to propound a particular question, it was properly within the discretion of the Court to refuse to allow him to be examined outside the limits of that question. It is also within the discretion of the trial Court to allow rebuttal evidence to be introduced, out of its order, in the examination in-chief, though such evidence is anticipatory of the case to be presented by the other side. On the same principle where the examination of a witness is needlessly protracted, it is within the discretion of the Court to arrest it, and the Judge may properly interfere on objection made or of his own motion. Buri Jones § 814

Right to begin. In the regular order of procedure, the party having the affirmative ought to introduce all the evidence necessary to support the substance of the issue, then the party denying the affirmative allegations should produce his proof, and finally the proof in rebuttal is received. Burr Jones § 809 The right to begin is to be determined by the rules of evidence. As a general rule the party on whom the burden of proof rests should begin. Sections 101-114 of the Indian Evidence Act deal with the subject of burden of proof. Section 102 of the Act provides that the burden of proof lies on that party who would fail if no evidence at all were given on either side. Ordinarily the plaintiff has the right to begin. But where the defendant admits all the facts alleged by the plaintiff and contends that either in point of law or on some additional facts alleged by the defendant the plaintiff is not entitled to any party of the relief which he seeks, in which case the defendant has the right to begin. Civil Procedure Code, Order XVIII rule 1, Aghore v. Prem Chand 7 C L R 274, Wood v. Pringle, 1 Moo & R 277, Curtis v. Wheeler 4 C & P 196

On the day fixed for the hearing of the suit or on any other day to which the hearing is adjourned the party having the right to begin shall state his case and produce his evidence in support of the issues which he is bound to prove. The other party shall then state his case and produce his evidence (if any) and may then address the Court generally on the whole case. The party beginning may then reply generally on the whole case. Civil Procedure Code, Order XVIII rule 2. If there be some defendants who support the plaintiff's case, in that case, they should address the Court and call their evidence before the other defendants. Haji Bibi v. Sultan Mahamed, 32 B 399 Where

S 136 there are several issues the burden of proving some of which lies on the other party, the party, beginning may, at his option, either produce his evidence on those issues or reserve it by way of answer to the evidence produced by the other party, and in the latter case, the party beginning may produce evidence on those issues after the other party has produced all his evidence, and the other party may then reply specially on the evidence so produced by the party beginning but the party beginning will then be entitled to reply generally on the whole case Civil Procedure Code, Order XVIII, rule 3

As regards order of production of witnesses in criminal cases, vide Chapters XVIII, XX, XXI, XXII, XXIII of the Criminal Procedure Code

136 When either party proposes to give evidence of any fact, the Judge may ask the party proposing to give the evidence in what manner the alleged fact, if proved, would be relevant, and the Judge shall admit the evidence if he thinks that the fact, if proved, would be relevant and not otherwise

If the fact proposed to be proved is one of which evidence is admissible only upon proof of some other fact, such last-mentioned fact must be proved before evidence is given of the fact first mentioned, unless the party undertakes to give proof of such fact, and the Court is satisfied with such undertaking

If the relevancy of one alleged fact depends upon another alleged fact being first proved, the Judge may, in his discretion either permit evidence of the first fact to be given before the second fact is proved, or require evidence to be given of the second fact before evidence is given of the first fact

Illustrations

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement about a relevant fact by a person alleged to be dead which statement is relevant under section 32

The fact that the person is dead must be proved by the person proposing to prove the statement, before evidence is given of the statement

(b) It is proposed to prove, by a copy, the contents of a document said to be lost

The fact that the original is lost must be proved by the person proposing to produce the copy, before the copy is produced

(c) A is accused of receiving stolen property knowing it to have been stolen

It is proposed to prove that he denied the possession of the property

The relevancy of the denial depends on the identity of the property. The Court may, in its discretion, either require the property to be identified before the denial of the possession is proved or permit the denial of possession to be proved before the property is identified

(d) It is proposed to prove a fact (A) which is said to have been the cause or effect of a fact in issue. There are several intermediate facts (B, C and D) which must be shown to exist before the fact (A) can be regarded as the cause or effect of the fact in issue. The Court may either permit A to be proved before B, C and D is proved, or may require proof of B, C and D before permitting proof of A

Para I The reception of clearly incompetent evidence is a practice which leads to confusion in the trial casts the burden of meeting such incompetent evidence upon the opposite party, and is liable to entail useless expense of money and waste of time in fruitless inquiry. The evil consequences which may follow from such a practice are sufficient to condemn it. Haqan v Mc Dermott 131 Wis 490, Burr Jones § 813. The order in which a party shall offer his evidence is for his counsel to determine, unless it is made to appear to the Court that some undue advantage of the opposite party is thereby attempted. When evidence is offered which proves or tends to prove any relevant fact, it is to be presumed that this will be followed by such other proof as is necessary to establish the proper connection. Hence, it is of no consequence in what order the evidence is introduced, so far as its ultimate legitimacy is concerned provided, in its relation to the other evidence in the case it is at the end pertinent to the issue. A case consists, frequently of various parts, neither one of which makes it out and to hold that a party is not entitled to introduce any part until he establishes the whole is to require an impossibility. All that the Court can ask is, that the particular evidence offered conduces to establish any one proposition involved in the issue. It is time enough to pass upon the sufficiency of the proofs after they are all in the cause. There must be a starting place somewhere and the Court should never reject evidence merely because, unaided by other testimony it is insufficient, if it tend legally to prove any part of the case. The practice is the same in criminal and civil cases. Where a claim of testimony is proposed the links of which, unconnected, would be irrelevant, counsel must be allowed to begin somewhere upon the expectation that other links are to be afterwards supplied, and for this the Courts rely upon the statement of counsel, professional honour being a guarantee against abuse. For example, the Court may permit a sheriff's deed to be given in evidence before the judgment and execution on which it is founded are introduced, and where one relies on his right as assignee of a bond he may introduce the bond in evidence before he shows his title and interest in it. Burr Jones § 812. So it is clear that relevant testimony, admissible in itself, may be given in evidence as of right, and that when its admissibility does not depend upon itself but rests upon some necessarily preliminary proof, its reception is matter of privilege. In other words the Court may reject it in the absence of that testimony without which it would be incoherent. It has often been declared that the relevancy of testimony need not always appear at the time when it is offered, since it is "the usual course to receive it at any proper and convenient stage of the trial, in the discretion of the Judge any evidence which the counsel shows will be rendered material by other evidence which he undertakes to produce. If it is not subsequently thus connected with the issue, it is to be laid out of the case." Green Et § 51 (7). But if the testimony is apparently irrelevant, before counsel can claim the indulgence of the Court in this manner to introduce evidence, other wise presumably incompetent he should state what he expects to prove or in some other way satisfy the Court that the evidence will be made competent. But on cross examination much more latitude is necessarily allowed to counsel. In the absence of such assurance the evidence should not be received. If it is plain when the testimony is offered that it is irrelevant, and it is objected to, and there is no suggestion that it would be made competent through circumstances not then disclosed, the Court would be justified in rejecting it. We are next brought to consider the consequences when the assurances of counsel that the evidence will subsequently be perfected and the links in the chain supplied are not fulfilled. Burr Jones § 813. Evidence cannot be given to contravert an irrelevant matter. Kelly v Kelly, 3 B L R App 6.

Para 2 Vide Section 104 illustration and Notes. It often happens that an agent for instance to carry a message and bring back an answer, or do some other act, is put into the box before his agency or authority is proved. Thereupon an objection is taken by the opposing counsel that the evidence is not receivable, because the agency etc. is not proved. An undertaking is usually then given that evidence to prove the agency will be forthcoming at a later period whereupon the case proceeds. If the proof of agency should break down, the whole of the alleged agent's evidence is expunged from the Judge's notes. It would often be highly inconvenient to interrupt the witness in his story, and call another witness in the middle of his examination, to prove the agency. It is to meet such a state of things that the clause is provided. Verd. P. p. 119

S 137
S 138

Para 3 Vide notes under para (1). It is doubtful whether s. 138 gives the Court any discretion to allow evidence to corroborate a witness to be given under s. 137 before the witness himself is examined. See Wills v King Emperor 11 L. R. 1-9 C. 12 1-176-2 Ind C. 113. Where a Judge suggests to a pleader that it is needless for him to call further witnesses evidence on a particular point and suggests that they would be merely tested for cross-examination that is an intimation to the pleader that the Judge is satisfied with the evidence so far as it has gone and that the cross-examination of the witnesses that have been called has not impressed him and when the Judge has made such a suggestion and it has been acted upon by the pleader he and his client have a point of complaint if the Judge afterwards turns round and says 'I decide against you on this point.' Higgs, Mepstead & Dhaniram v Bha 1 L. R. 430

137 The examination of a witness in chief by the party who calls him shall be called his examination-in-chief

The examination of a witness by the adverse party shall be called his cross-examination

The examination of a witness, subsequent to the cross-examination by the party who called him, shall be called his re-examination

138 Witnesses shall be first examined in-chief, then (if the adverse party so desires) cross-examined then (if the party calling him so desires) re-examined

Order of examination

The examination and cross-examination must relate to relevant facts, but the cross-examination need not be confined to the facts to which the witness testified on his examination in-chief

The re-examination shall be directed to the explanation of matters referred to in cross-examination, and, if new matter is, by permission of the Court, introduced in re-examination the adverse party may further cross-examine upon that matter

Direction of re-examination

Scope of the Section A party on whom the burden of proof lies calls his witness and (after the witness has duly taken the oath or affirmed) examines him in support of it. The opposite party then cross-examines the witness. At the close of the cross-examination the witness is re-examined by the party who called him for the purpose of giving any explanation that may be required as to any answers made by him in cross-examination. The party then calls his next witness who is examined in like manner. When all the witnesses of the party beginning have been thus examined his case is closed. His opponent then opens his case and calls his witnesses who are examined in the same way firstly by himself in chief, then cross examined by his opponent and then re-examined if necessary by himself. The close of his case is ordinarily followed by his summing up of the evidence, and then by the speech in reply of the party who began. Sometimes however the latter at the close of his opponent's evidence claims to adduce further evidence in reply to that which has been given on the other side. Wills Evidence 2nd Ed p. 312

Every party to a suit is entitled to have all the witnesses whom he desires to call, and is ready at the trial to produce, heard by the Court, whatever opinion the Court may form by anticipation as to the probable value of the evidence when it shall be given. Looloo v Rajender, 8 W R 361, see also Bangshee v Choudhury, 1 W R 263, Morno v Bheem 6 W R 231, Chowdhury v Shib 17 W R 172, Gopee v Thugobind, 12 W R 229, Jeswant v Jaisingjee 2 M L J 124=6 W R 46 P C Magistrates should always be chary of taking upon themselves the duties of deciding on behalf of the parties which witness should be examined. Duggirala v Mulsum 23 M L J 134=16 Cr L J 156=27 Ind Cis 220

Witness to testify orally When testimony is to be given in Court at a trial, it is to be given verbally, in the presence of the Court and jury where the behaviour, expression, and gesture of a witness may be seen. One cannot write out his testimony, and read it to the jury him self, or have it read. One of the strongest indications of the truthfulness of a witness is his manner under the particular circumstances which surround the giving of his testimony. This is of course, lost to the jury unless the witness testify orally before it. Whenever possible therefore, and except where necessity compels testimony to be taken by deposition, the witness is to be personally present and state orally such facts as he may be called upon to give. A witness is expected to testify from his own knowledge. In the examination of witnesses much difference is brought out between the ideas and language of various witnesses in reference to their own knowledge of the facts about which they are questioned. One witness will know a thing, another will have a recollection and another will only go to the extent of giving his impression as to it. The chances are that all mean the same. With certain persons physical disability requires answers to be either written or made by signs, as in the case of deaf mutes. McKeehey's Ev § 243

Referring to this subject Mr Cox says — "No better mode of ascertaining the truth of a part transaction will probably ever be devised by human ingenuity than the present method of visa voce examination of witnesses conducted as it is in open Court, in the sight of the public and in the presence of the parties, their counsel and of the Judge and jury who all have an opportunity of observing the intelligence, demeanour inclination, bias or prejudice of the witnesses. In this way every man is given a fair and impartial trial, and his rights cannot be abridged, nor he be deprived of the inestimable blessings of life, liberty and property, without the concurrence of Judge and jury. In all cases, too, he has the constitutional privilege of facing his accusers, and by a manly defence, of shaping public opinion, which in this enlightened day is one of the greatest safeguards against injustice of every kind." Wootlesley p 16

Examination in chief The first rule which regulates examination in chief is this — Counsel can ask a witness whom he has called himself such questions only as are strictly relevant to the issue. Anything that goes to prove a material fact or which will affect the amount of damages is relevant every thing else will be rigorously excluded. And relevant facts must be proved in the legitimate way, a fact may be most material still that is no reason for admitting hearsay evidence. Again, counsel must confine his questions to matters of fact he must not put to a witness points of law, or ask him what he inferred from the facts which he saw or heard. The personal opinion of a witness on any matter is, as a rule, inadmissible except in the case of skilled or scientific witness, who are allowed to state their opinions whenever peculiar training or special experience is necessary to enable the tribunal to form a competent judgment on any matter in issue. Pouell Ev 526. Generally it is not the province of the Court to examine witnesses and as a rule Courts should leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as is provided in section 13 Janki v Sheo Narain, 82 Ind Cis 151=25 Cr L J 1226

Importance of examination in chief Cross examination is far easier than examination in chief. In cross-examination one cannot avoid getting answers which are not desired, but in chief a great deal depends upon the way in which witnesses are examined. Lord Alton's Recollections of the Bench and the bar. The examination of a witness in chief or the direct examination of a witness as it is sometimes called is very much underrated in its significance and its importance. Larry's Seven Lampes of Advocacy 82-83. If a direct examination is properly and skilfully conducted, the impression that is made by an honest witness is more lasting than any argument of counsel. The vital story of a single witness told in a winning way will leave a first impression upon a juror's mind that no eloquence can efface. It is no easy matter for an advocate to get his own evidence properly before a Court and jury. It is an important fact for him to remember that cases are often won or lost by the strategic formal statements of the parties themselves and the natural homely way they sometimes have of putting things. Belban's Day in Court pp 112-113. "If they had to examine a witness what they had got to do was to induce him to tell his story in the most dramatic fashion without exaggeration they had got to get him not to make a mere parrot-like repetition of the proof put to tell his own story as though he were telling it for the first time—not as though it were word learnt by heart but as if it were a plaintive story plaintively telling it. And they had got to get him to tell him in the difficult work." Larry's Seven Lampes of Advocacy pp 82-83. "An impression very generally prevails in both branches of the profession, that the examination in chief is an easy task which anybody may perform, undemanding neither ability nor experience. But this is a grave mistake, and the difficulty of the one or the other will be discovered at the first experiment." Cox Advocate cited in Hottesley 51-51. "In direct examination," says Mr. Best, "although mediocrity is more easily attainable it may be questioned whether high degree of excellence is not even still more rare. For it requires mental powers of no inferior order so to interrogate each witness, whether learned or unlearned, intelligent or dull matter of fact or imaginative simple minded or designing, as to bring his story before the tribunal in the most natural comprehensible and effective form." Best J.C. § 663. "You probably suppose," says Mr. Cox "that you have nothing to do but to take your brief in your hand and carry your witness through his evidence, as it is there set down, turning aside neither to the right hand nor to the left, and when you have come to the end of the statement on the paper, to resume your seat and leave him to be dealt with by your adversary in cross examination. But your task is far from being so easy." Cox Advocate cited in Hottesley 51-51. "No lawyer can be successful in the highest sense of the term unless he is a master of the difficult art of examining witnesses. It requires great combination of qualities than almost any other branch of advocacy, the most important of which are patience coolness and tact." Ibid pp 51-51. Great caution is required in the examination of all your witnesses after the first, to prevent their disagreement in any important particulars. No error of inexperience or unskilfulness is more common than to examine a witness according to the brief without reference to the evidence previously given and the requirements of the case as it stands. If you fear that there may be conflicting testimony on any point the first witness having varied from the statement in brief it is usually better to leave it as it stands upon that single testimony than to bring out a contradiction, but upon this you must exercise your sagacity at the moment, it must depend upon the particular facts of the case." Ibid p 57.

S 138

Duty of counsel. It is the duty of counsel to bring out clearly and in proper chronological order every relevant fact in support of his client's case to which the witness can depose. This task is more difficult than may at first sight appear. There timid witness must be encouraged, the reticent witness repressed, the witness who is too strong a partisan must be kept in check. And yet counsel must not suggest to the witness what he is to say. An honest witness however, should be left to tell his tale in his own way with as little interruption from counsel as possible. In criminal cases the duty of counsel for the prosecution is wider. It is the practice and probably the duty, of a prosecuting counsel to ask a witness questions favourable to the prisoner, for he must lay all the material evidence before the Court, whether it tells in favour of the prisoner or not, and not unduly press for a conviction. Powell Ev 526, Ramrangan v Emperor, 42 C 423.

Paul Brown's Golden Rules—Examination in chief "No better general rules" says Mr Wrottesley "for the examination of witness in chief that we know of, can be found than those given by David Paul Brown, who was one of the greatest American advocates His rules have stood the test of experience and have been found highly useful by the profession in the United States, and nearly every writer of note, on the subject, has borrowed largely from them We feel that we could have no safer guide, and have concluded to give the rules in full Wrottesley on examination of witnesses p 40 The following are David Paul Brown's Golden Rules for the examination in-chief of witnesses —

"1 If they are bold, and may injure your cause by pertness or for want of gravity and ceremony of manner towards them which may be calculated to repress their assurance

"2 If they are alarmed or diffident and their thoughts are evidently scattered, commence your examination with matters of familiar character remotely connected with the subject of their alarm or the matter in issue, as, for instance — Where do you live? Do you know the parties? How long have you known them? etc And when you have restored them to their composure, and the mind has regained its equilibrium, proceed to the more essential features of the case, being careful to be mild and distinct in your approaches lest you may again trouble the fountain from which you are to drink

"3 If the evidence of your witness be unfavourable to you (which should always be carefully guarded against) exhibit no want of composure, for there are many minds that form opinions of the nature or character of testimony chiefly from the effect which it may appear to produce upon the counsel

"4 If you perceive that the mind of the witness is imbued with prejudices against your client, hope but little from such a quarter, unless there be some facts which are essential to your client's protection and which that witness alone can prove either do not call him, or get rid of him as soon as possible If the opposite counsel perceive the bias to which I have referred he may employ it to your ruin In judicial enquiries, of all possible evils, the worst and the least to be resisted is an enemy in the disguise of a friend You cannot impeach him, you cannot cross-examine him, you cannot disarm him, you cannot indirectly even assail him and if you enquire the only privilege that is left to you and call other witnesses for the purposes of explanation, you must bear in mind that, instead of carrying the war into the enemy's country, the struggle is still between sections of your own forces and in the very heart, perhaps of your own camp Avoid this by all means

"5 Never call a witness whom your adversary will be compelled to call This will afford you the privilege of cross examination—take from your opponent the same privilege it thus gives you,—and in addition thereto, not only render everything unfavourable said by the witness doubly operative against the party calling him but also deprive that party of the power of counter acting the effect of the testimony

"6 Never ask a question without an object, nor without being able to connect that object with the case if objected to as irrelevant

"7 Be careful not to put your question in such a shape that, if opposed for informality you cannot sustain it, or at all events produce strong reason in its support Frequent failures in the discussion of points of evidence entangle your strength in the estimation of the jury, and greatly impair your hopes in the final result

"8 Never object to a question from your adversary without being able and disposed to enforce the objection Nothing is so monotonous, as to be constantly making and withdrawing objections, it either indicates a want of correct perception in making them, or a deficiency of real or of moral courage in not making them good

"9 Speak to your witness clearly and distinctly, as if you were awake and engaged in a matter of interest, and make him also speak distinctly and to your question How can it be supposed that the Court and the jury will be inclined to listen, when the only struggle seems to be whether the counsel or the witness shall first go to sleep?

S. 138

'10 Modulate your voice as circumstances may direct—' Inspire the fearful and repress the bold'

'11 Never begin before you are ready and always finish when you have done. In other words do not question for question's sake, but for an answer'

Allowing witnesses to tell in his own way 'The advocate may either allow the witness to tell his story in his own way, or he may bring out his testimony by a series of questions. If the witness is intelligent and honest the best way is to let him tell his own stories, but if he is stupid and inclined to speak of irrelevant matters, it is better to elicit his testimony by question'

Wrottesley p 38 But strictly speaking, 'no rule can be laid down for this, it must depend upon your discernment at the moment. There is a class of minds which can only recall facts by recalling all the associated circumstances, however irrelevant, they must repeat the whole of a long dialogue, and describe the most trivial occurrences of the time, in order to arrive at any particular part of the transaction. With such you have no help for it but to let them have their own way. It is the result of a peculiar mental constitution, and endeavours to disturb their trains of association will only produce inextricable confusion in the ideas of witnesses and you will be further than ever from arriving at your object. But if you are dealing with that other class of witnesses happily more rare, who appear to have no trains of thought at all, who can observe no order of events, whose ideas are confused as to time, place and person, your only chance of extracting anything to your purpose is to begin by requesting that they will simply answer your questions and falling in, as it were, with their own mental condition, proceed to interrogate them, after their own fashion, with disconnected questions, and so endeavour to draw out of them isolated facts, which you will afterwards connect together in your reply, or which may dovetail with the rest of the evidence, so as to form a complete story' Wrottesley p 62 citing Cox's Advocate

Continuous narration without question May not the witness narrate his knowledge in continuous speech and without the interruption of questions? It is obvious that this method, on the one hand, has often the advantage of preserving continuity and clearness of thought for the witness himself and saving time for all parties concerned Wigmore § 767 'One of the important branches of advocacy' said Mr Harris 'is the examination of a witness in chief. One fact should be remembered to start with and it is this the witness whom he has to examine has probably a plain straight forward story to tell and that upon the telling it depends the belief or disbelief of the jury, and their consequent verdict. If it were to be told amid social circle of friends, it would be narrated with more or less circumlocution and considerable exactness. But all the facts would come out, and that is the first thing to insure if the case be as I must all along assume it to be, an honest one. I have often known half a story told and that the worst half, too the rest having to be got out by the leader in re-examination if he have the opportunity. If the story were being told as I have suggested in private all the company would understand it, and if the narrator were known as a man of truth, all would believe him. It would require no advocate to elicit the facts or to confuse the dates, the events would flow putting much in their natural order. Now change the audience let the same man attempt to tell the same story in a Court of Justice. His first feeling is that he must tell it in his own way. He is going to be examined upon it he is to have it dragged out of him piecemeal, disjointedly, by a series of questions—in fact he is to be interrupted at every point in a worse manner than if everybody in the room, one after another, had questioned him about what he was going to tell instead of waiting till he had told it. It is not unlike a post mortem, only the witness is alive, and keenly sensitive to the painful operation. Now the best thing the advocate can do under these circumstances is to remember that the witness has something to tell, and that but for him the advocate, would probably tell it very well in his own way. The fewer interruptions therefore the better and the fewer questions, the less questions will be needed. Watching should be the chief work, pecially to see that the story be not confused with extraneous and irrelevant matter" Harris on Hints on Advocacy p 29 S 138.

Objection to questions by other party The general principle governing the time of the objection is that it must be made as soon as the applicability of it is known to the opponent Wignmore § 18, Kissen Kamini v Ram Chandra 12 W R 13, Sheetal Pershad v Junnigoy, 12 W R 214 For evidence contained in a specific question, the objection must ordinarily be made as soon as the question is stated, and before the answer is given, unless the admissibility is due, not to subject of the question, but to some feature of the answer Wignmore § 18, *vid*o p 73 supra If objection be not made in proper time it is generally considered as being waived But the rule of waiver is not applicable in case of inadmissible evidence Shiller v Madho Das 23 I A, 106 (116)=1917, Sri Rajah Pralasarayann v Venkata Ram 38 M 160 When evidence is rejected by the Court, the party whose evidence has been rejected should ask the Judge to make a note of it Taylor § 1882 A, Rameswar v Emperor, 30 Ind Cis 593=21 Cr L J 21, Darya v Emperor, 9 Bur L T 153=36 Ind Cis 469 Failure to object to the reception of evidence which is irrelevant cannot make it relevant Larchu v Mela Ram, A I R 1929 Lah 583 The question of admissibility should be dealt with by the Judge immediately Lal Jan Singh v Emperor, 86 Ind Cis 817=A I R 1925 All 405

Cross Examination. When a witness has been examined in chief, the other party has a right to cross-examine him The powers of cross examination has been justly said to be one of the principal, as it certainly is one of the most efficacious, tests which the law has devised for the discovery of truth By means of it the situation of the witness with respect to the parties and to the subject of litigation, his interest, his motives, his inclination and prejudices, his means of obtaining a correct and certain knowledge of the facts to which he bears testimony, the manner in which he has used those means his powers of discernment, memory, and description are all fully investigated and ascertained, and submitted to the consideration of the jury, before whom he has testified, and who have thus had an opportunity of observing his demeanour, and of determining the just weight and value of his testimony It is not easy for a witness who is subjected to this test to impose on a Court or jury for however artful the fabrication of falsehood may be, it cannot embrace all the circumstances to which a cross examination may be extended Greenl Et § 446, Starkis Ev Vol I, 160 On the subject of "cross examination or examination ex adverso" Mr Best cited certain celebrated passages from Quintilian and advised them to be studied attentively (Vide Best Ev § 653) The following free translation of the same is given by Norman J in Meer Syad Ali v Kashee Nath Dass 6 W R C R 181 at p 182 "In dealing with a witness who is to be compelled to speak the truth against his will, the greatest success consists in drawing out what he wishes to keep back This can only be done by repeating the interrogation in greater detail He will give answers which he thinks do not hurt his cause and afterwards from many things which he will have confessed, he may be led into such a strait that what he will not say, he cannot deny For as in an oration, we generally collect scattered proofs, which singly do not appear to press on the accused yet, by being put together, prove the charge, so a witness of this sort should be asked many things as to what he went before—what came after—as to place, time, and persons and other things so that he must fall upon some answer after which he must fall upon some answer after which he must necessarily either confess what is desired or contradict his former statements If this does not happen it may become apparent that he will not speak, or he may be drawn out and detected in some falsehood foreign to the cause or by being led on to say more than the matter requires in favour of the accused the Judge may be led to suspect him, which will damage his cause not less than it had spoken the truth against the accused It sometimes happens that the testimony given by a witness is inconsistent with itself Sometimes (and that is the more frequent case) one witness contradicts another A skilful interrogation may produce by art that which usually happens accidentally Apart from the cause, witnesses are usually asked many questions which may be useful, as to the lives of other witnesses, as to their own character and position, any crimes they have committed, their friendship or enmity to the parties—in the answers to which, they may either make some useful admission, or be detected either in a falsehood or the desire of injuring to the opposite party.”

S 138

It is certainly implied by s 138 of the Evidence Act that a party must have had an opportunity to cross examine and does not mean that merely a right to cross examine a witness without an opportunity being offered for cross examination is sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law. Moti Singh v Dhanuk Dhan, 73 Ind Cr 339=24 Cr L J 595=(1923) P 53

Cross examination as a distinctive and vital feature of English Law For centuries past, the policy of Anglo Saxon system of Evidence has been to regard the necessity of testing by cross examination as a vital feature of law The belief that no safe ground for testing the value of human statements is comparable to that furnished by cross examination, and the conviction that no statement (unless by special exception) should be used as testimony until it has been probed and sublimated by that test, has found increasing strength in lengthening experience Not even the abuses, the mishandlings and the puerilities which are so often found associated with cross examination have availed to nullify its value It may be that in more than one sense it takes the place in our system which torture occupied in the mediæval system of the civilisations Nevertheless it is beyond any doubt the greatest legal engine ever invented for the discovery of truth However difficult it may be for the layman the scientist or the foreign jurists to appreciate this its wonderful power there has probably never been a moment's doubt upon this point in the mind of a lawyer of experience “You can do anything” Said Wendel Phillips, ‘with a bayonet—except sit upon it A lawyer can do anything with a cross examination—if he is skillful enough not to impale his own cause upon it He may, it is true, do more than he ought to do, he may ‘make the worse appear his better reason, to perplex and dash maturest counsels—may make the truth appear like falsehood But this abuse of its power is able to be remedied by proper control The fact of this unique and irresistible power remains, and is the reason for our faith in its merits If we omit political considerations of broader range, then cross-examination not trial by jury, is the great and permanent contribution of the English system of law to improved method of trial procedure Wigmore § 1367 ‘Whoever has attended to the examination says Bayley J in Berkely Peerage Case 4 Crump 400 “the cross-examination, and the re-examination of witnesses, and has observed what a very different shape their story appears to take in each of these stages will at once see how extremely dangerous it is to act on the ex parte statement of any witness and still more of a witness brought forward under the influence of a party interested’ However artful’ says Mr Starkie “the fabrication of the falsehood may be it cannot embrace all the circumstances to which the cross-examination may be extended, the fraud is therefore open to detection for want of consistency between that which has been fabricated and that which the witness must either represent according to the truth for want of previous preparation, or misrepresent according to his own immediate invention The power and liberty of cross examination is one of the principal tests which the law has devised for the ascertainment of truth and is certainly a most efficacious test.” Starkie Evidence Vol. I, pp 96 129 In State v Campbell 1 Rich L 126, Richardson J said ‘Experience has proved that it is, of all others, the most effective, the most satisfactory, and the most indispensable test of the evidence narrated on the witness stand I know of no disagreement among the expounders of evidence, upon the importance of cross-examination’

Cross examination—Theory of The fundamental feature is that a witness, on his direct examination, discloses but a part of the necessary facts That which remains suppressed or undeveloped may be of two sorts, (a) the remaining and qualifying circumstances of the subject of testimony as known to the witness, and (b) the facts which diminish and impeach the personal trustworthiness of the witness (a) The remaining and qualifying circumstances of the subject of testimony will probably remain suppressed or undisclosed not merely because his testimony is commonly given only by way of answers to specific interrogatories, and the counsel producing him will usually ask for nothing but the facts favourable to his party. If nothing more were done to unveil all the facts known to this witness his testimony (for all that we could surmise) might present half truths only. Some one must probe for the possible (and usual) remainder. The best person to do this is the one most vitally interested, namely, the opponent. Cross examination, then, is a further examination by the opponent, has for its first utility the extraction of the remaining and qualifying circumstances, if any, known to the witness, but hitherto undisclosed by him. (b) The facts which diminish and impeach the personal trustworthiness or credit of the witness will also, in every likelihood, have remained undisclosed on the direct examination. There it is the further function of the opponent's examination to extract. Some of them, no doubt, could be as well or sometimes better proved by other witnesses. But many of them can be obtained only from the witness himself,—particularly those which concern his personal conduct and his sources of knowledge for the case in hand. To this extent, again cross examination is vital: it does what must be done and what nothing else can do. Wignore § 1368. So the objects of cross examination are to impeach the accuracy, credibility, and general value of the evidence given in chief, to shift the facts already stated by the witness to detect and expose discrepancies, or to elicit suppressed facts which will support the case of the cross-examining party. Pouell Ev 532. By means of cross-examination also the situation of the witness with respect to the parties and to the subject of the litigation, his interests, his motives, his inclination, his prejudices, his character, his means of obtaining a correct and certain knowledge of the facts to which he bears testimony, the manner in which he has used those means, his powers of discernment, memory and description, are all fully investigated, and ascertained, and submitted to the consideration of the jury, who have an opportunity of observing his demeanour, and of determining the just value of his testimony. Taylor § 1428.

There are at bottom but two kinds of cross-examination,—the one intended to elicit friendly evidence to make the witness give a complete narrative, if what has been kept back is favourable to your side, and the other to show the unreliability of the witness. Reed's Conduct of Law Suit, 2nd Ed 250.

Cross examination—opportunity of, whether equivalent to actual cross examination. The doctrine requiring a testing of testimonial statements by cross-examination has always been understood as requiring, not necessarily an actual cross examination but merely an opportunity to exercise the right to cross-examine if desired. The reason is that, wherever the opponent has declined to avail himself of the offered opportunity, it must be supposed to have been because he believed that the testimony could not or need not be disputed at all or shaken by cross-examination. In having the opportunity and still declining he has had all the benefit that could be expected from the cross-examination of that witness. Wignore § 1371. To satisfy this principle, says Mr Starkie, it is not necessary that the party on whose authority the statement rests should be present at the time when his evidence is used in order that he may then be cross-examined, it is sufficient if the party against whom it was offered has cross-examined or has had the opportunity of doing so, being legally called upon so to do when the statement was made. If the party might have had the benefit of a cross-examination in the course of judicial proceeding it is the same thing as if he had actually availed himself of the opportunity. Starkie Ev 97. Similarly in Caenue v Langham, 1 M & S 6, Lord Ellenborough C J said 'The rule of the common law is that no evidence shall be admitted but what is or might be under the examination of both parties. But if the adverse party has had liberty to cross-examine and has not chosen to exercise it the case is then the same in effect as if he had cross-examined. Here then the question is whether the defendant had an opportunity of cross-examining.' Mali v Dhanukdhari 73 Ind Cas 339-24 Cr L J 595, Chato v Rajaram, 11 C L J 124 (F B), Motnam v Lalit, 5 Pat L J 515.

- S 138. Evidence given when a party never had the opportunity either to examine or to cross-examine the witness, as the case may be, or to rebut by fresh evidence, is not legally admissible as evidence for or against him, unless he consents that it should be so used. Gorachand v Ramnarain, 9 W R 387, Gur Dyal v Sul hanandan, A I R 1929 P C 110. In the absence of cross examination evidence is of little value. Sarju v Emperor, 88 Ind Cas 852 = 26 Cr L J 1236 = A I R 1925 Oudh 726, Moti Singh v Dhanukdhari, 73 Ind Cas 339 = 21 Cr L J 395.

The proper time for cross examination of a witness is immediately after the examination in chief, and an order by a Magistrate allowing an accused examining the prosecution witnesses time until they have been all examined in chief is a proceeding not contemplated by the Criminal Procedure. Tanbi v Emperor, 11 Ind Cas 343 = 19 Cr L J 327.

Cross examination, right of. 'A deposition is considered a partial representation of facts as to all persons who have no opportunity of bringing out the whole truth by cross-examination.' Per Laurence J in Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Camp 412. So also in R v Linsuell 31 R 707, Kenyon L C J said 'Examinations upon oath, except in the excepted cases, are of no avail unless they are made in a cause or proceeding depending between the parties to be affected by them and where each has an opportunity of cross-examining the witness.' The right of cross examination which an accused has means, only a right of cross examination of witnesses produced against him by the prosecution. Queen v Suroop, 12 W R Cr 75 see also Queen v Shama Chaman 10 W R Cr 25, Queen v Ishan 6 B L R App 88 = 15 W R Cr 34; Queen Empress v Ramchandra 19 B 749, Meei Syad v Kashmath, 6 W R 181, Radha v Taramon 12 M I A 380, Gorachand v Ram Narain, 9 W R 387, Ram v Ashori, 3 B L R 273 = 12 W R 130, Tamim v Saroda, 11 W R 468, Shahzada v Jakri 2 B L R App 2. In a criminal case every facility should be given to the accused to cross examine the prosecution witnesses. Sadasiv v Emperor, 41 C 299. An accused person must be allowed to cross-examine witnesses called by another co-accused for his defence if the case of the latter is adverse to that of the former. Ramchandra v Hanif Sheikh 21 C 401. R v Burditt 6 Cox 458. Allen v Allen L R P D (1894) 248 254, R v Howden, 20 Cox Cr 206 = (1902) 1 K B 882. In Allen v Allen, (1894) P 248 the Court of Appeal was disposed to hold, but did not hold, that the Judge was wrong in refusing to allow the co-respondent to cross examine the respondent, and yet in his summing up contrasting the evidence given by the one with the evidence given by the other. As they held the Judge wrong in the latter matter, they thought it unnecessary to express concluded opinion on the former which is to be regretted, as the point still appears to be left open. Poughl Fr 229. A co-defendant whose interests are separately represented may cross examine another with a view of discrediting evidence which he has given in favour of the plaintiff. Narasimma v Kutanaia 1 M H C R 456.

When a witness has been examined in chief the other party has a right to cross examine him. R v Burditt 6 Cox 458, Lord v Colvin, 3 Drew 222, 223. But the question often arises whether the witness has been so examined in chief as to give the other party his right. If the witness is called merely for the purpose of producing a paper, which is to be proved by another witness, he need not be sworn, vide section 139 infra. Perry v Gibson, 1 Ad & El 48, Davis v Dale, 1 M & M 514. Reeds v James 1 Stark 132. Rush v Smith, 1 C M & R 94. Summers v Mosely 2 C & M 477. Bracegirdle v Bailey, 1 F. & F 536. In England, when a competent witness is called and sworn, the other party will, ordinarily in strictness, be entitled to cross examine him though the party calling him does not choose to examine him in chief. (R v Brook 2 Stark 473. Phillips v Eamer 1 Esp 357, Dunlop v Shee 4 E p 67. R v Murphy, 1 A M & O 204) unless he was sworn by mistake (Chifford v Hunter, 3 C & P 16, Rush v Smith 1 C M & R 94. Wood v Mackinson, 2 M & R 273) or unless an immaterial question, having been put to him, his further cross-examination has been stopped by the Judge. Greedy v Carr 7 C & P 64. Greent Et § 445. And even where a plaintiff was under the necessity of calling the defendant in interest as a witness, for the sake of formal proof only, he not being a party to the record, it has been held that he was thereby made a witness for all purposes, and might be cross-examined to the whole case Morgan v Brydges, 2 Stark 314 Greent Ev § 445

A witness summoned and examined by Court cannot, as of right, be cross-examined either by the prosecutor or by the accused. The Court as a general rule should however allow the parties to cross-examine the witness if they desire to do so Chowai v Queen, S C 275 Oudh. Such a witness is a witness of the Court. The counsel of neither party has a right to cross-examine him without the permission of the Judge. The Judge must exercise his discretion whether he will allow the witness to be cross-examined. If what the witness has said in answer to the questions put to him by the Judge is adverse to either of the parties the Judge would no doubt allow and he ought to allow, that party counsel to cross-examine the witness upon his answers. A general fishing cross-examination ought not to be permitted." Per Lord Esher 11 R. in Coulson v Disborough (1894) 2 Q. B. 316, but see Tarmy v Saroda, 3 B. L. R. 145, Gundas v Gndhan 11 W. R. 110, Gopal v Manel 24 C. 238, Empress v Gurish 5 C. 614 Sharfara, v Dhunno 16 W. R. 257

It is the duty of the Magistrate to insist on the trials proceeding from day to day and rigidly to check prolix examination and cross-examination of witnesses in exercise of the powers inherent in all Magistrates to prevent abuse of process F. W. Sole v Crown, 11 S. L. R. 27

Death of witness after examination in chief. Where a witness dies after examination in chief and before cross-examination the evidence is admissible but the weight to be attached to such evidence should depend upon the circumstances of each case and though in some cases the Court may act upon it, if there is other evidence on record its probative value may be very small and may even be disregarded. Maharajah of Kolhapur v Sundaram, 48 M. 1-A I R 192, Mad 497, Jones v Fort, 1 M. & M 196, R v Hagan, 1 Jebb Cr C 127. Where the witness's death or lasting illness would not have intervened to prevent cross-examination but for the voluntary act of the witness himself or the party offering him—viz., by a postponement or other interruption brought about immediately after the direct examination, it seems clear that the direct testimony must be struck out. Upon the same principle the same result should follow where the illness is but temporary and the offering party might have reproduced the witness for cross-examination before the end of the trial. But where the death or illness prevents cross-examination under such circumstances that no responsibility of any sort can be attributed to either the witness or his party, it seems harsh measure to strike out all that has been obtained on the direct examination. Nevertheless the principle requires in strictness nothing less. The true solution would be to avoid any inflexible rule and to leave it to the trial Judge to admit the direct examination so far as the loss of cross-examination can be shown to him not in that instance a material loss. Wymore § 1300. In R v Mitchell, 17 Cox Cr 503 a dying woman was examined in chief and after her cross-examination had continued for about 10 minutes the Magistrate stopped on account of her condition. She died a few minutes after. Her evidence was held inadmissible. But in Fuller v Rice 1 Gray 313, Shaw C J said "No general rule can be laid down in respect to unfinished testimony. If substantially complete it ought not to be rejected."

Cross-examination by Court. In Nur Bae Aa v Empress 6 C. 279, Garth C J said "We think it right to point out to the Sessions Judge, that the course which he adopted in the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution was irregular, opposed to the provisions of section 138 of the Evidence Act, and not fair to the prisoners. We find that, on the examination-in-chief being finished, the Judge questioned almost all the witnesses at considerable length upon the very points to which he must have known that the cross-examination would certainly and properly be directed. The result of this, of course, was to render the cross-examination by the prisoners' pleaders to a great extent ineffective, by assisting the witnesses to explain away, in anticipation the points which might have afforded proper guide for useful cross-examination."

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

S 138. It is not the province of the Court to examine the witnesses, unless the pleaders on either side have omitted to put some material question or questions, and the Court should, as a general rule, leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as laid down in section 139 of the Act. The Judges power to put questions under s 165 is certainly not intended to be used in the manner which we have had occasion to notice in the present case. Generally it is not the province of the Court to examine witnesses, and as a rule the Court should leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as provided for in section 138. Janani v Sheo Narain 82 Ind Cis 151

Multiple examiners It has long been a tradition that but one counsel should question during a single stage in the examination (direct or cross-examination) of a single witness. Cheppendale v Masvan 1 Cimp 174, Mason v Ditchbourne 1 Moo & Rob 160. It is of course subject to reasonable exception allowable in the trial Courts discretion. Higmore § 783. In Doe v Doe, 2 Camp 280 Lord Ellenborough A C J said Convenience certainly requires that the examination of a witness should be carried on entirely by the gentleman who begins it and several counsels clearly cannot be permitted to put questions to the same witness one after another in the manner apprehended to take the examination into his own hands. Very unpleasant consequence might follow if this were not allowed. If a gentleman it being his first appearance in a Court of Justice should be much embarrassed in the course of examining a witness, it would be hard if it were in the power of the opposita party to prevent his leader from stepping into his relief. And other occasions may be imagined when it may be very important that the gentleman who conducts the cause should have the privilege of putting questions to a witness originally called by a co adjutor. In the present state of the bar there is no danger of this privilege being abused.

Length of cross examination Although we do not regard it always safe that a Judge should freely interfere with the discretion of counsel while cross-examining witnesses still when the privilege is abused it seems but right that the Judge should also exercise some control over cross examination assuming inordinate length. In the Golden R Mining Co v Buxton Mining Co, 91 Fed Report 414 it was held that examination of witnesses must not be protracted beyond reasonable limits even if the questions put be logically relevant. The admissibility of such evidence depends upon the opinion of the trying Judge, and if he is of opinion that a clear inference can be drawn without going into such details as would confuse the jury and unnecesrily protract the case he may not allow questions on collateral issues to be put. A C W N 221. So where the examination of a witness is needlessly protracted it is within the discretion of the Court to arrest it. Burr Jones § 814. Baile v Kanhaiya A I R 1922 Oudh 174. This discretion the Court can use even where a witness is examined in commision. Vide Suraj Prasad v Standard L J C 30 C 625. Must Bibi Kanur v Mobatal A I R 1924 Pat. 281. But a Court should not fix arbitrary limit. Empero v Asruddin 63 Ind Cis 412-22 Cr L J 524. It may be frequently necessary to allow a repetition of statements by a witness or the repetition of interrogatives, until full answers are obtained. Burr Jones § 814.

Cross examination whether should be confined to relevant facts. In England great latitude is permitted in cross examination, and a cross examiner will not be stopped by the Court unless the question is manifestly irrelevant and calculated neither to weaken the exaomnation in chief nor to impeach the credit of the witness. Questions clearly irrelevant in examination in chief may be relevant and of the highest importance when asked in cross-examination. In cross-examination then a witness may be asked any question however irrelevant to the matter in issue the answer to which may tend to affect his credit but he will not always be obliged to answer the question and if he does answer it he cannot as a rule be contradicted. He may be asked questions which affect his veracity such as whether he has been convicted of a crime whether he is a relation, or intimate friend, or under any special obligation, to the party who calls him, whether he is not identified or connected with him in interest, whether he has not been on terms of enmity with the adverse party, whether his memory is not defective generally, as to the peculiar transaction, and whether he has been bribed, or paid to give evidence. Pouell Lr 503. So also under section 138 of the Evidence Act an accused has the right to cross-examine prosecution witnesses at the conclusion of their examination in chief and such cross-examinations may be on all points and by means of all questions not disallowed by the Evidence Act. Cross-examination need not be confined to matters raised elsewhere in the evidence. Mahomed Ali v Emperor 12 Cr L J 277=10 Ind Crs 917. R v Khan, 6 B L R, App 58=15 W R Cr 311, Mayor v Murray 19 L J Ch 281, Subramanyam v Government of Mysore, 6 Mys L J 551 (F B).

But even in cross-examination, irrelevant questions will be disallowed, if they neither contradict or qualify the result of the examination in chief, nor impeach the credit of the witness. Thus a cross-examiner may not as a rule ask questions of the witness as to his transactions with a third person. Pouell Lr 533. See also Tennant v Hamilton, 7 Cl & F 123, Hollingham v Heald, 1 C B N 5 353.

Cross-examination to credit is necessarily irrelevant to any issue in the action, its relevancy consists in being addressed to the credit or discredit of the witness in the box so as to show that his evidence for and against the relevant issue is untrustworthy. It is most relevant in a case where everything depends on the Judge's belief or disbelief in the witness's story. The Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co v Motilal Shirlal, 19 C W N 617=17 Bom L R 455=29 M L J 593=30 B 336 P C. It is unprofessional on the part of counsel to cross-examine a witness as to facts within his personal knowledge. Donald Watson v Peary Mohan, 40 C 893=18 C W N 185. Where counsel acting under instruction imputed a dishonest act to a witness which counsel did not substantiate their lordships of the High Court, having been expressly asked by counsel on both sides to make some statement on the subject, expressed their opinion that in all the circumstances and having regard to the character of the litigation and the parties to the suit, the imputation complained of ought to have been withdrawn. In re Messrs Crompton & Co v Secretary of State, 26 M L J 519.

What facts are not relevant in cross-examination. In cross-examination too the facts inquired into must be relevant. A witness may not be cross-examined as to purely collateral matters, for they are foreign to the issue. If questions upon such collateral facts were permitted to be put for the purpose of laying a foundation to contradict the witness as to the answers he might give, it is clear that one trial might ramify into fifty. A Judge might have to try twenty different issues upon matters which would not in the least assist, but, on the contrary might embarrass him in dividing the issues really before him. For instance in an action on a contract a witness should not be examined or cross-examined as to a contract made with third parties. The leading case on this point is Spence v De Willott, 7 List 108. Here the Court was all decidedly of opinion that it was not competent to counsel, in cross-examination to question the witness concerning a fact wholly irrelevant to the matter in issue if answered affirmatively for the purpose of discrediting him. If he answered in the negative by calling other witnesses to disprove what he said. That in this case, whatever contracts the witness might have entered into with other persons for other loans such other contracts could not be evidence of the contract made with the defendant, unless the witness had first said that he made the same contract with the defendant as he had made with those persons which however he had not said. Nort Lr 321. Section 138 of the Evidence Act gives the defence the right to cross-examine prosecution witnesses at the conclusion of their examination in-chief, and such cross-examination may be on all points and by means of all questions not disallowed by the Evidence Act. Mahomed Ali v Emperor, 12 Cr L J 277=10 Ind Crs 917.

The Art of cross-examination. 'Since the direct examination may not have disclosed all the remaining and qualifying circumstances of the issues, as known to the witness, and may also have left unveiled the deficiencies of his

S 138 knowledge, the suspicious of his motives, and other elements of discredit, it remains for the cross-examiner to evoke them. But what is he about to evoke? What will be the complexion of these facts which extracted? They may be what the cross-examiner hopes. And yet they may not be. In the long run there will be a large proportion of such facts. But for a given witness it is otherwise. The cross-examiner may already know what is there waiting for disclosure. But if he does not, he is forced by a contingency. He may extract the most confirming circumstances for the proponent's own case which have somehow been left unmentioned. He may demonstrate that the credit of the witness is greater, not less than was supposed. The great axiom, then, of the art of cross-examination as dependent on the theory, is that it is a contingency whether the facts that will actually be extracted will be favourable or unfavourable to the cross-examiner's purposes. It is here that the art (that is the technical skill) of cross-examination enters. On this hangs all the lesser rules of the art. Hence it is that it must call to its aid so many other elements than mere knowledge of law. Experience of human nature, judgment of chances, knowledge of the case, tact of manner—all these things and more, have to do with the art. Yet the theory of the process underlies and influences at every point. To cross-examine or not to cross-examine,—that is the fundamental question, which springs from the essential nature of the process and arises anew for every part of every witness's testimony. The greatest cross-examiners have always stated this as the ultimate problem." Higmore § 1368

David Paul Brown's Golden Rules for cross examination '1 Except in indifferent matters, never take your eye from that of the witness. This is a channel of communication from mind to mind, the loss of which nothing can compensate —

*'Truth, falsehood hatred anger, scorn despair
And all the passions—all the soul is there'*

"2 Be not regardless, either of the voice of the witness. Next to the eye, this is perhaps the best interpreter of his mind. The very design to screen conscience from crime—the mental reservation of the witness—is often manifested in the tone or accent or emphasis of the voice. For instance it becoming important to know that the witness was at the corner of Sixth and Chestnut Streets at a certain time, the question is asked were you at the corner of Sixth and Chestnut Streets at six o'clock? A frank witness would answer perhaps I was near there. But a witness who had been there, desirous to conceal the fact, and to defeat your object speaking to the letter rather than the spirit of the enquiry answers, No although he may have been within a stone's throw of the place or at the very place, within ten minutes of the time. The common answer of such a witness would be I was not at the corner, at six o'clock. Emphasis upon both words plainly implies a mental evasion or equivocation and gives rise with a skilful examiner, to the question At what hour were you at the corner or at what place were you at six o'clock? And in nine instances out of ten it will appear that the witness was at the place about the time, or at the time about the place. There is no cope for further illustrations, but be watchful I say of the voice and the principle may be easily applied.

3 Be mild with the mild shrewd with the crafty, confiding with the honest merciful to the young the firm or the fearful rough to the ruffian and a thunderbolt to the liar. But in all this, never be unmindful of your own dignity. Bring to bear all the powers of your mind, not that you may shine, but that virtue may triumph, and your cause may prosper.

4 In a criminal, especially in a capital case, so long as your cause stands well ask but a few questions, and be certain never to ask any the answer to which if against you may destroy your client, unless you know the witness perfectly well, and know that his answer will be favourable equally well or unless you be prepared with testimony to destroy him, if he play traitor to the truth and your expectations.

5 An equivocal question is almost as much to be avoided and condemned as an equivocal answer, and it always leads to or excuses an equivocal answer. Singleness of purpose, clearly expressed, is the best trait in the examination of witnesses, whether they be honest or the reverse. Falsehood is not detected by cunning, but by the light of the truth, or if by cunning, it is the cunning of the witness, and not of the counsel.

"6 If the witness determine to be witty or refractory with you, you had better settle that account with him at first, or its items will increase with the examination. Let him have an opportunity of satisfying himself either that he has mistaken your power or his own. But, in any result, be careful that you do not lose your temper, anger is always either the precursor or evidence of assured defeat in every intellectual conflict.

"7 Like a skilful chess player, in every move fix your mind upon the combinations and relations of the game, partial and temporary success may otherwise end in total and remediless defeat.

"8 Never undervalue your adversary, but stand steadily upon your guard, a random blow may be just as fatal as though it were directed by the most consummate skill, the negligence of one often cures, and sometimes renders effective, the blunders of another.

"9 Be respectful to the Court and to the jury, kind to your colleague, civil to your antagonist, but never sacrifice the slightest principle of duty to an overweening deference towards either."

Cross examination of the perjured witness. "It seldom happens that a witness's entire testimony is false from beginning to end. Perhaps the greater part of it is true, and only the crucial part—the point, however, on which the whole case may turn—is wilfully false. If at the end of this direct testimony, we conclude that the witness we have to cross examine, comes under this class, what means are we to employ to expose him to the jury? Let us first be certain we are right in our estimate of him—that he intends perjury. Embarrassment is one of the emblems of perjury, but by no means always so. The novelty and difficulty of the situation—being called upon to testify before a room full of people, with lawyers on all sides ready to ridicule or abuse—often occasions embarrassment in witnesses of the highest integrity. Then again some people are constitutionally nervous and could be nothing else when testifying in open Court. Let us be sure our witness is not of this type before we subject him to the particular form of torture we have to store for the perjuror. Witnesses of a low grade of intelligence, when they testify falsely, usually display it in various ways in the voice, in a certain vacant expression of the eyes, in a nervous twisting about in the witness chair in an apparent effort to recall to mind the exact wording of their story and especially in the use of language not suited to their station in life. On the other hand, there is something about the manner of an honest but ignorant witness that makes it at once manifest to an experienced lawyer that he is narrating only the things that he has actually seen and heard. The expression of the face changes with the narrative as he recalls the scene to his mind, he looks the examiner full in the face, his eye brightens as he recalls to mind the various incidents, he uses gestures natural to a man in his station of life, and suits them to the part of the story he is narrating, and tells his tale in his own accustomed language.

"If, however, the manner of the witness and the wording of his testimony bear all the earmarks of fabrication, it is often useful as your first question to ask him to repeat his story. Usually he will repeat it in almost identically the same words as before, showing he has learned it by heart. Of course it is possible, though not probable, that he has done this and still is telling the truth. Try him by taking him to the middle of his story, and from there jump him quickly to the beginning, and then to the end of it. If he is speaking by rote rather than from recollection, he will be sure to succumb to this method. He has no facts with which to associate the wording of his story, he can only call it to mind, as a whole, and not in detachments. Draw his attention to other facts entirely dissociated with the main story as told by himself. He will be entirely unprepared for these new inquiries, and will draw upon his imagination for answers. Distract his thoughts again to some new part of his main story and then suddenly when his mind is upon another subject, return to those considerations to which you had first called his attention, and ask him the same question a second time. He will again fall back upon his imagination and very likely will give a different answer from the first—and you have him in the net. He cannot invent answers as fast as you can invent questions and at the same time remember his previous inventions correctly, he will not keep his answers all consistent with one another. He will soon become confused and, from that time on, will be at your mercy. Let him go as soon as you have made it apparent that he is not mistaken but lying." Wellman's the Art of cross examination pp. 50-53.

S 138

But the difficulty is that perjury is not confined to ignorant classes alone. Nothing in the trial of a cause is so difficult as to expose the perjury of a witness whose intelligence enables him to hide his lack of scruple. There are various methods of attempting it, but no uniform rule can be laid down as to the proper manner to be displayed towards such a witness. It all depends upon the individual character you have to unmask. In a large majority of cases the chance of success will be greatly increased by not allowing the witness to see that you suspect him before you can lead him to commit himself as to various matters with which you have reason to believe you can confront him later on. Wellman, the Art of cross examination p. 54. In this connection Mr Reed says: "You must sometimes try to entrap the false witness into such self-contradiction or repugnancy to known facts as will induce the belief that his testimony is feigned." The following extract from Mr Cox is full of good instruction upon this sort of cross-examination: "Open gently mildly do not appear to doubt him (the witness), go at once to the marrow of the story he has told, as if you are not afraid of it, make him repeat it then carry him away to some distant and collateral topic, and try his memory upon that, so as to divert his thoughts from the main objects of your enquiry and prevent his seeing the connection between the tale he had told and the questions you are about to put to him. Then by slow approaches bring him back to the main circumstances by the investigation of which it is that you propose to show the falsity of the story."

"If however you adopt the other course (i.e.) to show that you suspect him at the first and instead of surprising the witness into the betrayal of his falsehood you resolve to bring out of him by a bold and open attack—to awe him as it were, into honesty—aspect and voice must express your consciousness of his perjury and your resolve to have the truth. A stern determined fixing of your eye upon his, will often suffice to unnerve him, and it will certainly help you to assure yourself whether your suspicions are just or unjust. It may be stated as a general rule that a witness who is lying will not look you boldly and fully in the face with a steady gaze, his eye quivers and turns away is cast down or wanders restlessly about. On the contrary the witness who is speaking the truth or what he believed to be the truth will meet your gaze however timidly will look at you when he answers your questions, and will let you look into his eyes."

"Thus assured, and pursuing your plan of bold attack, there needs to be no circumlocution, no gradual approaching—but go straight to your object, plunging him at once into the story you are questioning. Make him repeat it slowly. It will often be that, under the discomposure of your detection of his purpose, he will directly vary from his former statement and if he does so in material points which are undoubtedly sufficient to discredit him, it will usually be the more prudent course to leave him there self-condemned instead of continuing the examination lest you should give him time to rally and perhaps to contrive a story that will explain away his contradiction. If however his lesson is well learned, and he repeats the narrative very nearly as at first, you will have to try another course which will task your ingenuity and patience."

"Procure from him in detail, and let his words be taken down, the particulars of his story and then question him as to various circumstances upon which he is not likely to have prepared himself, and to answer which, therefore he must draw on his invention at the instant. Some little ingenuity will be necessary on your part after surveying the story to select the weak points for your experiment and to suggest the circumstances most likely to have been pre-arranged. Having obtained his answers, permit him no pause, but in (and) take him to a new subject, lead his thoughts away altogether from the matter of your main topic. The more irrelevant your queries, the better, your purpose is to occupy his mind with a new train of ideas. Conduct him to different places and persons and events. Then in the very midst of your questioning, when his mind is the most remote from the subject, when he is expecting the next question to relate to the one that has gone before suddenly return to your first point not repeating the main story (for this having been well learned will probably be repeated as before) but to those circumstances associated with it upon which you surprised him into invention on the moment. It is most probable that after such a diversion of his thoughts he will have forgotten what his answers were, what were the fictions with which he had filled up the accretions of his false narration, and having no leisure allowed to him for reflection, he will now give a different account of the circumstances and so betray his falsehood. Of all the arts of cross examination there is none so efficient as this for the detection of a lie.

"Another excellent plan is to take the witness through his story, but not in the same order of incidents in which he told it. Dislocate his train of ideas, and you put him out. You disturb his memory of his lesson. Thus, begin your cross examination at the middle of his narrative then jump to one end then to some other part of the most remote from the subject of the previous question. If he is telling the truth, this will not confuse him because he speaks from impressions upon his mind, but if he is lying, he will be perplexed and will betray himself, for speaking from the memory only which acts by association, you disturb that association and his invention breaks down.

"When you are satisfied that the witness is drawing upon his invention, there is no more certain process of detection than a rapid fire of questions. Give him no pause between them, no breathing pause, no time to rally. Few minds are sufficiently self possessed to maintain a consistent story under such a catechising. If there be a pause or a hesitation in the answer, you thereby lay bare a falsehood. The witness is conscious that he does not stop to think whether the answer he is about to give will be consistent with the answers already given, and he is betrayed into contradictions. In this process it is necessary to fix him to time and place and names. 'You heard him say so?' 'Where?' 'Who were present?' 'Name them' 'Name one of them.' Such a string of questions following one upon the other as fast as the answer is given will frequently confound the most audacious. 'Fit names and times and places are not readily invented or if invented not readily remembered.' Reed's Conduct of law suits, 307 308

Truthful witness 'The truthful witness has been said to be the most difficult of all to cross-examine. I cannot help differing so much from that opinion as to say that I have always regarded him as the easiest of any. When I say truthful I do not intend to imply that his evidence is necessarily true. If it were so it would be idle to cross examine at all. What I mean by a truthful witness is one who believes and intends his evidence to be true. He is the easiest to deal with, because he does not equivocate. He has no secret meaning, and gives his answers readily and without mental reserve. He desires to tell you all he knows, and his credibility I will assume, is unimpeachable. The first thing to ascertain in cross-examining a witness of this class is whether he has any strong bias or prejudice in the matter under inquiry. One or two carefully worded questions will discover this, if you have not already learnt it from his answers in chief.' Harris p 107

Spy as a witness "If this man is accidentally, or from previous information or suspicion, designedly, present during the plotting of some offence, whether against the state or Government or individuals, and from his dislike of the meditated conspiracy, and to further the ends of justice he conscientiously remains to learn the views and secrets of the associates in the plot, with the fixed design to stop and counteract it or if unable to do this at least to aid in punishing the conspirator, this conduct may be justifiable, both legally and morally, and it will follow that if to convict the parties to the plot he gives his evidence against them, the mere character of spy ought not to prejudice, or

S 138. stain the credit of the witness To this man no guilt of the plotted offence attaches Another description of spy may be a man, who has undignifiedly been present at a plot, and by the inducement or example of others, been tempted to join it, or a man who has been even one of the original framers of the plot, and either of these men, whether from seeing that the proceedings may lead him further than he intended, or from some quarrel with his companions, or from repentance or other cause, may secretly and unknown to the others withdraw from the confederacy, and from that time resolve to watch their proceedings with the view to be a witness against them, and with this intent to continue to attend at their meetings and take notes of or carry away in his memory, what he sees and hears This man stops short in his career of guilt as a conspirator before it is perfected But as all kinds of spies meditating to inform, are naturally in some degree disliked, there is no doubt in each of the men before mentioned a something, which affects and endangers his credit Yet it need not in either of those instances utterly destroy it For it is plain the man has had the very best opportunity of seeing and hearing what was done and said by his associates And to what extent his credit is hurt, and how far he is to be believed may be learnt from considering whether the different parts of his story are consistent with each other whether he is contradicted in any material fact by other witnesses and whether there is a probability of truth in what he says If his story is consistent, if he is not contradicted in any material fact, and a fortiori if he is confirmed in material facts, by other witnesses, and if probability supports his story it may be right to believe him And, although, in the course of his examination, there is some hesitation or confusion in his answers shame in his countenance or embarrassment in his demeanour, yet it should be recollected that, excepting the shame, each of the other defects is often seen in the most honest and honourable witness such is the natural and often the inevitable, fruit of the wily and ensnaring questions put to the witness by a skilful and sly interrogator And the shame itself is a token favourable to the witness in as much as it shows he feels himself degraded by the character he bears of a spy and to be void of all appearance of shame would argue a want of self respect under an imputation of dishonour' Ram on Facts, 171 179

Police witness "Everyone who conducts a defence in a criminal trial has to deal with police testimony, and as a class of evidence it figures more conspicuously in criminal courts than any other Again I shall commence by saying as far as possible leave him alone They are dangerous persons They are professional witnesses, and in a sense that no other class of witness can be said to be Their answers generally may be said to be stereotyped All the ordinary questions have been answered scores of time by the well disciplined 'active and intelligent officer' Don't imagine that you are going to trip him up upon the path where his beat has been for many a year He will perceive you coming while you are a long way off and in all probability go out and meet you Perhaps before you were born he answered the question you have just put. HarrisHints on Advocacy p 104, Willman's Day in Court 182 Iyer's Cross examination, Vol II p 260 He knows what you will ask him if you are no better than the rank and file of Quarter Sessions cross-examiners But try him with something just a little out of the common line, by way of experiment You see he looks at you as though he had got the sun in his eyes He cannot quite see what you are about And you must keep him with the sun in his eyes if you desire to make anything of him If he sees the drift of your questions, the chances are against your getting the answer you want or in the form in which you would like them He thinks it is his duty to huddle you and if you do not get an answer you don't want, it will probably be because the policeman is as young and inexperienced as you are HarrisHints on Advocacy pp 104, 105, Iyer's Advocacy Series Vol. II p 281 To be effective with police men your questions must be rapidly put Although he has a trained mind for the witness box, it is trained in a very narrow groove it moves as he himself moves, slowly and ponderously along its particular beat, it travels slowly because of its discipline and is by no means able to keep pace with yours or ought not to be You should not permit him to trace the connection between one question and another when you desire that he should not do so. If you ask him whether it was very dark night, and the darkness has nothing whatever to do with the case, he will commence a process of reasoning as to your motive, and what might possibly be the effect of his answer. While his mental exertion is going on, interrupt there suddenly with a question you have good reason for putting, and in all probability you will get something near the answer you inquire. Unless certain of answer, never under any circumstances, ask a police man as to character. Your client may have the best, but police men have such a high standard that no man in the dock can ever come up to it. Further more it is dangerous to put "fishing" questions to this class of witness. You are almost sure to catch the wrong answer. Your safer course will be to cross examine for contradictions and improbabilities, not forgetting where necessary to give the witness the opportunity of denying anything upon which you intend to contradict him. Cross examine for prejudice and as to opportunities, remembering always that there is often as much in the manner as in the matter of cross examination, and much more at times in silence than in both. Ibid

Expert witness. Attention is also called to the distinction between mere matters of scientific fact and mere matters of opinion. For example, certain medical experts may be called to establish certain medical facts which are not mere matters of opinion. On such facts the experts could not disagree, but in the province of mere opinion it is well known that the experts differ so much among themselves that but little credit is given to mere expert opinion as such. As a general thing, it is unwise for the cross-examiner to attempt to cope with a specialist in his own field of inquiry. Lengthy cross examinations along the lines of the expert's theory are usually disastrous and should rarely be attempted. Many lawyers for example, undertake to cope with a medical or hand writing expert on his own ground—surgery, correct diagnosis or the intricacies of penmanship. In some rare instances (more especially with newly educated physicians) this method of cross questioning is productive of result. More frequently however it affords an opportunity for the doctor to enlarge upon his testimony he has already given and to explain what might otherwise have been misunderstood or even entirely overlooked by the jury. Experience has led me to believe that a physician should rarely be cross examined on his own speciality unless the importance of the case has warranted so close a study by the counsel of this particular subject under discussion as to justify the experiment and then only when the lawyer's research of the medical authorities, which he should have with him in Court, convinces him that he can expose the doctor's erroneous conclusions not only to himself but to a jury who will not readily comprehend the abstract theory of physiology upon which even the medical profession itself is divided. On the other hand, some careful and judicious questions, seeking to bring out separate facts and separate points from the knowledge and experience of the expert will tend to support the theory of the attorney's own side of the case, are usually productive of good result. In other words the art of the cross-examiner should be directed to bring out such scientific facts from the knowledge of the expert as will help his case and this tend to destroy the weight of the opinion of the expert given against him. Another suggestion which should always be borne in mind is that no question should be put to an expert which is in any way so broad as to give the expert an opportunity to expatiate upon his own views, and thus afford him an opportunity in his answer to give his reasons, in his own way for his opinions which counsel calling him as an expert might not otherwise have fully brought out in his examination." Wellman's The Art of Cross-examination, pp 74-75

"A successful method of cross examining professional expert is to quietly and gradually lead him to an extreme position which can neither be fortified nor defended. If this cause can be carefully conceived, it is often expedient to now and then wonder from the direct path and create a belief that the road the witness is to be taken over is a very different one from that which the examiner has resolved he shall travel. The examiner must not, however, for an instant, lose his temper, nor suffer his attention to be drawn from the time he means to take. When the position is reached, then, if the witness attempts to retreat or explain, it is well enough that the examiner's manner should become severe and determined, and the witness sternly kept to the questions asked him. An expert, when he finds himself in an uncomfortable position will resort to all sorts of artifices and shifts to turn the tide of his examination, but turned it must not be. A keen eye kept upon the witness will often enable the examiner to detect his purpose and to check it. The same faculty which enables the swordsman to detect and guard against a feint of his adversary very often enables the advocate to discover and prevent the artifices of a witness." Elliot, 264-265

S 138

Woman witness "Women, I have usually found much better witness of what they have seen than men. Men reflect on and draw inferences from what they have seen and are apt to mix in their evidence what they surmise must have happened with what they actually saw happening. Women usually tell what they saw. Their evidence however is reliable only so long as their passions are not involved when love of the husband or children or hatred of their neighbour enters into the question not a word they utter can be trusted. They have no conscience." Strahan's Bench and Bar p. 69. "Now and then in her own case a woman will commit the grossest perjury but when she is called as a witness she far surpasses men in the perspicuity of her narrative and in the honesty of her replies. No counsel who has any pretence to tact ever tries to get the better of a plain country woman giving evidence at the assizes. There is just a chance of eliciting some favourable answer if you treat her with profound respect call her 'madam' and soften your voice but even these artifices will not induce her to swerve from what she has made up her mind in the real trial of the case." George Whitt's Life in Law p. 51, Angar's cross-examination Vol II p. 251

Re examination. When the cross examination of the witness is concluded the party who called him has the right to re-examine him on all matters arising out of the cross examination for the purpose of reconciling any discrepancies that may exist between the evidence on the examination in chief and that which has been given in cross examination, or for the purpose of removing or diminishing any suspicion that the cross examination may have cast on the evidence in chief or to enable the witness to state the whole truth as to matters which have only been partially dealt with in cross examination. If there has been no cross-examination there can be no re-examination. And it is, as a rule unnecessary, and therefore wrong to repeat any question already put in chief. Only such questions may be asked as are connected with and arise out of the cross examination. Pouell Es 539. The Judge however, may in his discretion allow old questions to be put. Per Curiam in Scott v Sampson 8 Q. B. D. 506. No new evidence can be introduced in the re-examination. The Queen's Case 2 B & B at p. 297. In that case Lord Tenterden said "I think that counsels have a right upon re-examination to ask all questions which may be proper to draw forth in explanation of the sense and meaning of the expressions used by the witness on cross examination if they be in themselves doubtful as also of the motive by which the witness was induced to use those expressions but I think he has no right to go further and to introduce matter new in itself and not wanted for the purpose of explaining either the expressions or the motives of the witness."

"So far as the evidence of the opponent is to be explained away," says Prof Greenleaf contradicted or otherwise repudiated, by any process which consists merely in diminishing or negating its force the original party has the right to do this, either by a re-examination following immediately upon the cross-examination of his witness or by new witnesses called in rebuttal after the opponent's own evidence has been put in. But anything beyond this cannot belong to him as of strict right the reason being that, all questions that we asked are to be asked at the proper time otherwise the trial will be in perpetual confusion (per L. C. Handley in Lord Lovat's Trial 18 How St. Tr. 658) and the proper time for all matters not rendered material by the course of the opponent's cross-examinations of his own witnesses' testimony is the original party's direct examination of his witnesses. Nevertheless, to obviate the effects of inadvertence it will often be fair to allow a party to do it at a later stage what he might and should have done at an earlier one. The propriety of his making an exception must depend largely on the circumstances of each case, and for this reason it is universally held in almost all the varieties of situations thus presented, that the allowance of such evidence out of its natural order is to be determined by the discretion of the trial Court. The line between the evidence which is merely explanatory of and rendered necessary by the opponent's, and evidence which might have been introduced at an earlier stage is often difficult to draw but the principle is apparent. A variety of situations for the exercise of the discretion of the trial Court may present themselves. (1) In the re-examination of a witness immediately after his cross-examination, or in the stage of rebuttal after the opponent's own evidence has all been put in it may be desired to add testimony of new facts, a matter which was omitted in the direct examination as a whole or in that of the particular witness but might have been there put in. This may be done in the trial Court's discretion. (2) In the re-examination of a particular witness or in the general stage of rebuttal it may be desired to repeat or emphasize or detail more precisely a matter already testified to in chief. This also may be done in the trial Court's discretion and a re-examination to make corrections should be treated in the same way. (3) After a witness has been cross-examined and dismissed it may become desirable to recall him to the stand for further direct examination, this may be granted or refused in the trial Court's discretion. After one re-examination, it may be desired to re-examine the witness a second time either immediately after a re-cross-examination or after the witness has left the stand this may be granted or refused in discretion. (4) After the evidence has been put in by each party and the case declared closed and even after argument or charge begun it may become important to supply omissions and here also the discretion of the Court must control. Greul Et § 406 (a). In R v Morrison 75 J P 272 the Court allowed the accused to call fresh evidence after counsel for the prosecution had commenced his final speech. But a witness who has been cross-examined as to a conversation with a party cannot be re-examined as to parts of the conversation not connected with the portion to which the cross-examination referred. Prince v Samo 7 A & E 627. If such questions are asked and answered the witness may be again cross-examined but such further cross-examination will be confined to the matter so improperly introduced. Powell Ev 540.

Where on an indictment for murder the prosecution called witnesses whose names were on the back of the indictment solely in order to give the prisoner the opportunity of putting questions to them, and the prisoner elicited by his cross-examination many facts in his own favour, it was held that the prosecution could not re-examine to any matters not referred to in such cross-examination. R v Dee-ley, 4 C & P 220 Wills Fr 2nd Ed p 327. The explanations of the witness in re-examination may of course relate not only to statements made in cross-examination as to the relevant facts but also as to those affecting the witness's credit, as for instance to show what provocation he had received for making use of a vindictive expression which he has admitted having uttered. R v St George 9 C & P 483 (488). In re-examination no question as to the context of a document can be asked where it is only put in the cross-examination in the hand of a witness for identification. Cope v Thames Haven Dock 2 C & K 757, Collier v Niles 2 C & K 1012. Whenever any part of a witness's evidence in chief is not directly or indirectly challenged in cross-examination there is of course no occasion nor any right to re-examine thereon. Wills Ev 2nd Ed 328.

139 A person summoned to produce a document does not become a witness by the mere fact that he produces it and cannot be cross-examined unless and until he is called as a witness.

Cross-examination of person called to produce a document

Scope of the section.—Where a witness is summoned by subpoena duces tecum merely to produce documents, he need not be sworn. Perry v Gibson,

S 140 1 A & I 18, Summer v Mosley 2 C & M 177 But if he has to speak to the proper or safe custody of the document, the course of business in his office with respect to documents, filing, noting, docketing, and the like, or to do more than merely produce, he must be sworn. Scott 1 L 323 When a witness is not sworn, he can not be cross-examined. Perry v Gibson 1 A & I 18, Summer v Mosley, 2 C & M 177 Rush v Smith, 3 L J 1 x 375 But if he is called as a witness & if he is sworn, the opposite party is entitled to cross-examine him. This is so although he is not examined, but is merely called to produce a document. But a party is not entitled to cross-examine a witness called by mistake, if the mistake be discovered before any question is put to him. Wood v Marlinton 2 M & R 273 In the above case Coleridge J said "Upon the whole, it appears to me that the more satisfactory principle to lay down is this, that if there really be a mistake whether on the part of counsel or officer, and that mistake be discovered before the examination in chief has begun, the adverse party ought not to have the right to take advantage on this mistake by cross-examining the witness." Here the learned counsel explains that there has been a mistake, which consists in this that the witness is found not to be able to speak at all as to the transaction which was supposed to be within his knowledge. This is I think such a mistake as entitles the party calling the witness to withdraw him without his being subject to cross-examination. If, indeed the witness had been able to give evidence of the transaction which he was called to prove, but the counsel had discovered the witness, besides that transaction, knew other matters inconvenient to be disclosed, and therefore attempted to withdraw him, that would be a different case. I think the defendants have here no right to cross-examine the witness.

Witnesses to character
ter

140 Witnesses to character may be cross examined and re-examined

Scops Where witnesses are called simply to speak to the character of a prisoner it is not usual to cross-examine them, excepting under special circumstances. R v Hodgkins, 7 C & P 298, but no rule of law expressly forbids this. Taylor § 1429 see also R v Wood 5 Jur 225 But where a witness for the prisoner having proved that he had known him for some years, and given him a good character, stated, on cross-examination, that he had never heard anything against him, but admitted that he had heard of a robbery which had taken place in the neighbourhood some years previously, and was then asked 'Did you ever hear that the prisoner was suspected of having done it?' It was objected that it was not competent to enquire about offences imputed to the prisoner. Parle v B said 'The question is not whether the prisoner was guilty of that robbery, but whether he was suspected of having been implicated in it. The man's character is made up of a number of small circumstances of which his being suspected of misconduct is one. The question may be put.' R v Wood, 5 Jur 225

141 Any question suggesting the answer which the person putting it wishes or expects to Leading questions receive is called a leading question

Leading questions meaning of A leading question is one which suggests to the witness the answer which it is desired he should give. If the questions are asked to which the answer 'Yes' or 'No' would be conclusive they would certainly be objectionable (in examination in chief). Per Lord Ellenborough C J in Nichols v Dowling 1 Stark 81. A leading question means what its name indicates—one which leads the witness up to the desired answer i.e., one which is put in such a way as to suggest to the witness the answer which is expected or wanted. There is no particular form which will make a question leading or will save it from being such. The fact that a question is put so as to require a categorical answer does not necessarily make it leading though it may do so nor does the fact that a question is prefaced by 'whether or not' so as to avoid a categorical answer, save it from being leading. Best Ev § 611.

Wells v Quimby 31 N H 485, 490 "A question" says Bentham "is a leading one, when it indicates to the witness the real or supposed fact which the examiner expects and desires to have confirmed by the answer. Is not your name so and so? Do you reside in such a place? Are you not in the service of such and such a person? Have you not lived so many years with him? It is clear that under this form every sort of information may be conveyed to the witness in disguise. It may be used to prepare him to give the desired answers to the questions about to be put to him, the examiner, while he pretends to, no, since and is asking for information, is in reality giving instead of receiving it." Bentham Rationale of Judicial Evidence. It is very clear that a question is leading which suggests to the witness the answer which he is to make or which puts into his mouth words which he is to echo back. Pinney v State, 16 Mis 104. But if it merely suggests a subject, without suggesting an answer or a specific thing, it is not leading. Born v Rosemond 84 Wis 620. It has often been declared that a question is objectionable as leading, which embodies a material fact and admits of answer by a simple affirmative or negative. Green v Liv § 431. While it is true that a question which may be answered by 'yes' or 'no' is generally leading there may be such questions which in no way suggest the answer desired, and to which there is no real objection. On the other hand leading questions are by no means limited to those which may be answered by "yes" or "no." A question proposed to a witness in the form "whether or not" that is in the alternative, is not necessarily leading. But it may be so, when proposed in that form, if it is so framed as to suggest to the witness the answer desired. And that has been called a leading question which assumes a fact to be proved which is not proved. More properly, such questions may be called misleading, and are objectionable both as likely to mislead a fair witness. Burt Jones § 816.

142 Leading questions must not, if objected to by the adverse party, be asked in an examination-in-chief, or in a re-examination, except with the permission of the Court

When they must not be asked

The Court shall permit leading questions as to matters which are introductory or undisputed, or which have, in its opinion, been already sufficiently proved

Principle "The assigned reason in support of the rule is that a witness usually has a strong feeling in favour of the party who has subpoenaed him and is disposed to swear anything that he thinks will serve the party, and that a leading question in effect suggests to the witness the answer that he is desired to give and invites misrepresentation. This reason imputes to the counsel an unworthy motive, and to every witness a supposition that he would be guilty of perjury, but perhaps the better and more comprehensive reason is that many witnesses, either from complaisance or indolence are too much disposed to assent to the proposition of the counsel and answer as he may suggest, instead of reflecting and answering after an exertion of their own memory. Joseph Chittys Practice of Law, Vol III, 892. But Chief Justice Appleton in his Evidence - and "The end proposed in extracting testimony is the obtaining the actual recollection of the witness, not the notions of another person suggested to and adopted by the witness and falsely delivered as his. The real danger is that of collusion between the witness interrogated and the counsel interrogating, and that the counsel will deliberately imply or suggest facts with the expectation on his part and with an understanding on the part of the witness that he will assent to the truth of the false facts thus suggested." Appleton Et 227.

Scope of the Section The witness must not be examined in chief by means of leading questions that is, questions calculated to lead his mind to such answers as the party examining desires. It is presumed that a witness is to some extent biased in favour of the party who calls him and this fact coupled with the party's knowledge of what his witness is prepared to say, would afford the party an opportunity for unfairly shaping the testimony if he were allowed to frame his questions to the witness in such form as to suggest what answer he desires to receive. Wills Ev 2nd Ed p 315. Such evidence would obviously be open to suspicion, as being the rather pre-arranged version of the party than the spontaneous narrative of the witness. Best § 641, Stark Ev 166, Phip Ev 113. The prohibition of all leading interrogation is a principle of Courts, no less of India than of England, and as respects the Criminal Courts of all the three Indian Presidencies, leading interrogation is in express terms excluded by the Regulation Law under which they are governed (Vid Beng. Reg. IV of 1797 s 6 Madras Reg. VII of 1802, s 18, Bom. Reg. XIII of 1827 s 36). The oldest of the Regulations on the subject (that governing the Presidency of Bengal) and which may be taken in principle as a sample of the others, provides — 'In the examination of witnesses leading questions suggesting an answer or having a tendency to such suggestion, are to be carefully avoided, and the interrogatories to them are to be proposed in such general terms, as may bring forth all the information they possess and lead to a discovery of the truth.' Up to the point of dispute, however,—that is while the examination is introductory only to what is material,—the witness may be led. Were it otherwise a very unnecessary consumption might be had of the time of the Court, and a great infliction practised on its patience. Goodere Ev p 215.

S 142

"It is often a convenient way of examining," says Mr. Alison, 'to ask a witness whether such a thing was said or done, because the thing mentioned aids his recollection and brings him to that stage of the proceeding to which it is desired he should dilate. But this is not always fair and when any subject is approached on which his evidence is expected to be really important, the proper course is to ask him what was done or what was said, or tell his own story. In this way also if the witness is at all intelligent, a more consistent and intelligible statement will generally be got there by putting separate questions.' Alison's Practice, 546.

But the determination of what is, and what is not, leading is in itself frequently one of difficulty, whenever the test has to be applied to any particular question. And the particular difficulty on the one hand is to secure that all the essential portion of the narrative be given in its entirety, and on the other, to prevent a needless prolixity of statement. "It is not a very easy thing," says Mr. Starkie, 'to lay down any precise general rule as to leading questions. On the one hand, it is clear that the mind of the witness must be brought into contact with the subject of enquiry, and on the other hand, that he ought not to be prompted to give a particular answer, or to be asked any question to which the answer 'yes' or 'no' would be conclusive. But how far it may be necessary, to particularize in framing the question, must depend on the circumstances of each individual case.' Starkie on Evidence p 167.

The "Yes or No" test suggested by Mr. Starkie is not however it is submitted, a very accurate and at all events must not be taken as an universal one. There are many instances in which it would be the natural response, without the question which evoked it being leading. Thus suppose it was required to show the presence of the witness on any particular occasion, he might be asked—'Were you present on that occasion?'—Notwithstanding the natural answer to the question might be 'Yes or No.' It could hardly be requisite in such a case to go the round about way of asking—'Who was present?' There might have been a hundred people there, and the form of the question in this shape might leave the witness to exhaust the series in other words to tell over the ninety and nine before he arrived at himself. On the other hand, all such question as—'Did one say so and so?'—or 'Did he do so and so?'—while obviously capable of being answered by the Court—'Yes or No'—would, by suggesting what it was required of the witness to state, naturally provoke the reply. An illustration may be supplied from the duly practice of all Courts, where the question is one of personal identification. If there be no ground of suspicion, the individual is pointed out to the witness as he is asked directly,—'Is that the party?' and the answer is the simple—'Yes or No.' Let the witness however, be suspected the question would not be allowed to be put in that form, and the witness would be told to look round the Court and point out the individual in question. The invitation to the answer—"Yes or No"—would, in truth be leading or not according to the circumstances. Goodale v. Ev 217

S 142

One great test as to whether a question were to be regarded as leading would be its tendency to elicit an answer conveying rather in itself the result of facts, than a statement of the facts themselves from which the Court was to draw the result. Thus, if it were a question of some given arrangement come to at a particular meeting, the witness ought to be interrogated not as to the result, which he himself ascribed to the meeting, that is to say whether such and such was then arranged but generally only as to the detail of what took place, leaving it to the Court to draw the legal inference from the narrative. It is necessary, however to distinguish between a leading course of interrogatives and one, where the emergency arises, merely suggestive, and it is obvious that, while the mind of the witness must be brought into contact with the subject of enquiry when once there, the examination must be assisted, not only with such checks upon wandering, but with such suggestions to recollection, as occasion might require. Stall v. p 167, Goode v. Ev 218

Mere suggestions in the way of stimulants to the memory accordingly would not fall within the category of leading questions, and may be made wherever the incapacity to answer sufficiently appears to arise either from a want of recollection, or absence of some connecting link with the subject of examination. Thus the names of persons, or places or dates may be suggested, and sometimes particular transactions, or connecting circumstances. Though a touchstone only to memory, they might awaken the whole association in the mind, just as in music to strike one chord would be to recall the entire tune. In a question accordingly as to the component members of a firm, the names might be repeated the witness states that he could recognize them on repetition but could not rehearse them from memory. So he might be asked as to his knowledge or recollection of a particular date or circumstance, and he might be led from them to more detailed allusions as to occurrences in connection with them. Again some prior witness may have made a given statement which another might be called to contradict. Here the statement must be narrated to the latter, or he would be at fault to what to address his denial, and passages even of a letter might be suggested to him. So a witness unable to detail an entire conversation might yet have sufficient recollection to negative certain particular statements as part of it. Here the particular statements might be put to him, and he might be asked if they were in truth made. "It may frequently happen," says Mr. Stallic, "that a witness unable to detail even the substance of a particular conversation, may yet be able to negative with confidence proposals, offers, statements, or other matters sworn to have been made in the course of a conversation. In such cases, therefore, this form of enquiry is absolutely necessary for obtaining complete information on the subject. So where a witness is called to prove affirmatively what a witness on the other side has denied, as for instance, to prove that on some former occasion, that witness gave a different account of the transaction, a difficulty may frequently arise in proving affirmatively that the first witness did make such other statement, without a direct question to that effect." Lord Ellenborough, C J said "I have always understood, after some little experience, that the meaning of a leading question was this and thus only. That the Judge restrains an advocate who produces a witness on one particular side of a question, and who may be supposed to have a leaning to that side of the question from putting such interrogatories as may operate as an instruction to that witness how he is to reply to favour the party for whom he is adduced." 25 Hans Part. D. 207

Leading questions such as can properly be put in cross-examination of a hostile witness cannot be put by the Public Prosecutor in examination in chief. Diwanu Beldar v. Emperor, 2 Pat L. 1 757. The refusal to allow a question to be put in cross-examination merely because it was in form a leading question would be improper. If it is so disallowed the counsel should ask both the question and the order to be recorded. Dey v. King Emperor, 9 L. B. R. 55 = 3 Bur. L. T. 133 = 17 Cr. L. J. 500 = 36 Ind. C. 13 163

S 142

If objected to, etc. If the objection is not taken at the time, the answer will be taken down in the Judge's notes. Sometimes the Judge himself will interfere to prevent a leading question or series of leading questions being put, but it is the duty of the opposing counsel to take the objection, and it is only through want of practical skill that the omission occurs. At the same time, it is to be observed that if evidence is elicited by a series of leading questions unobjected to, the effect of the evidence so obtained is very much weakened, for it scarcely escapes the notice of the Judge. It is advisable, therefore, for a counsel, examining in chief or on re-examination not to put leading questions, except of course as to those points on which they are expressly permitted by the Act. Nort Ev 325.

The Court shall permit. As the rule is merely intended to prevent the examination from being conducted unfairly the Judge has a discretion, which is open to review (Laudon v Laudon 5 Ir L N S 27, Rice v Hounle, 16 Q. B. D 681) to relax it whenever he considers it necessary in the interest of justice, and it is always relaxed in the following cases (Phipson Ev 443) —

(1) Introductory matters.—Leading questions may always be asked on merely introductory matters, such as name or occupation of a witness. Cockle's Case 266. So also leading questions are proper where they are merely introductory and designed to lead the witness more quietly to matters which are material to the issue. For example in cases of conversational admissions or agreements, the attention of the witness may be drawn to the subject, occasion time place or person and he may be asked directly whether such person said anything on the subject thus brought under his attention, and if so what he said. Questions regarding the age, antecedent, business and experience of a witness are largely within the discretion of the Court and unless it manifestly appears that such questions are put for an improper purpose, such discretion is not receivable as error. Burr Jones § 817.

"The good sense of the rule" says Mr W D Evans in his Notes to Pothier II, 226 "is perfectly manifest with respect to all cases where the question propounded involves in answer immediately bearing upon the merits of the cause and indicating to the witness a representation which will best accord with the interests of the party. But where the questions are merely introductory where the mere answer of 'yes' or 'no' will have the point of the case precisely as it found it and can only be material as laying the foundation for a further inquiry, the reason of the objection does not occur and the objection itself appears to be ill founded and the making it can only proceed from a captious and petulant disposition to interrupt the course of examination.

2 On other matters not in dispute. A question is not objectionable as leading when it relates to matters as to which there is no dispute. In most cases it is necessary to prove a certain number of uncontested facts, in order that Judge and jury may understand the position of the parties and the circumstances surrounding the case. As to these matters leading questions are often put with the permission of counsel on the other side and such questions should then be put in the shortest and most direct manner. Powell Ev 528.

3 Assisting memory. Even upon points which are keenly contested between the parties the mind of a witness must frequently be led by the party who calls him to the extent of directing his attention to the particular matters sought to be inquired into (Vickolls v Douding 1 Stark 81) without some indication of the point on which his evidence is required a question may easily be unintelligible. Wills Ev 2nd Ed 31. Thus to prove slender in putting that 'A was a bankrupt whose name was in the Bankruptcy List, and would appear in the next Gazette,' a witness who had only proved the first two expressions was allowed to be asked 'was anything said about the Gazette?' Nichols v Douding 1 Stark 81. So where a witness stated that he could not remember the names of the members of a firm so as to repeat them without suggestion, but thought that he might recognise them if read to him, this was allowed to be done. Iccero v Petron 1 Stark 100, Phip Ev 444. So also where a witness's independent recollection of a matter has been exhausted, the Judge will often permit him to be led to the very particulars which are sought, if from the way in which he has given his evidence it appears that it can with may be done (Coutem v Fouse, 1 Camp 43), the imperfection of the witness's memory generally affords a sufficient test of the true value of the testimony thus elicited. Wills Ex 2nd Ed 315. In State v Jandell 5 Harringt 475 (478) the Court said "The rule is plain, its application is not always evident. You are first to test the witness's own knowledge or recollection of the terms by questions necessary for that, if his memory is at fault, you may suggest contemporaneous events, with a view to stimulate or fix his recollection." Wigmore § 777. It may not be necessary to name all the details—the mention of one or more of them may suffice by association to stimulate the recollection of the remainder. The common situation of this sort, running perhaps through out the person's entire testimony, is that of a child, or of an illiterate or alien adult. A related situation is that of a person too ill or too feeble of speech to be able to articulate sentences—here the sentences may be framed for him suggestively, leaving him as little as possible to articulate and yet avoiding the danger of a misunderstood signal of assent or dissent. Wigmore § 778.

4 Identification. On a question of identification, a witness may be asked whether the person pointed out to him is the person in question (R v Berger 2 Stark 129, R v Halsey, 32 How St Tr 74) though of course, if the witness can himself point out the person in question without the aid of such a question his evidence will have greater weight. Burr Jones § 817. Still, cases often arise where such an identification would be worthless, and where it would be in the highest degree unfair to prompt the witness. Best s 613, Whart s 602.

5 Contradiction. Another exception arises where it is desired to show that a witness on the opposite side has, at another time made a statement contradictory to his present statement. When the attention of such witness has been called on cross-examination, to the alleged contradictory statement and he has denied it, another witness may be asked the direct question whether the particular words denied were in fact used by the former witness. Best Ex 10th Ed § 642, Greenl Ex § 435, Burr Jones § 818, Edmonds v Waller 3 Stark 7. Courten v Touse, 1 Camp 43. There is, however, a conflict of opinion on this subject, and there is very high authority for the view that, in such a case the proper course of examination is to ask 'what the witness in fact said relative to the matter in question, and not in the first instance to ask in the leading form whether he said so and so'. Phill Ex 404. In this work on Evidence, Taylor suggests that the rule allowing the leading question in such cases 'should only apply to such expressions as in themselves are not evidence in the cause, the object of relaxing the general rule being simply to exclude the other parts of the conversation which would not be admissible'. Taylor § 1405. Where, however the conversation is not proved merely for the purpose of contradiction the latter question, is improper. Hallet v Cousens 2 M & R 238, Phill Ex 114.

6 Adverse witness. A similar situation arises where the witness though called by party examining, is in fact biased against the cause and is thus inclined to favour it by accepting suggestions of desired testimony. In such a case a question can not be objectionable leading. Wigmore § 774. "This unwillingness is commonly to be decided by the Judge according to his impression of the demeanour of the witness upon the trial. This situation of the witness, and the inducement which he may have for withholding a fair account, are also very proper circumstances to be taken into account in forming its decision. A son will not be very forward in stating the misconduct of his father of which he has been the only witness, a servant will not, in an action against his master, be very ready to acknowledge the negligence committed by itself." W D Evans, Notes on Pothier II 228. Wigmore § 774, Jac v Howard 16 Q B D 681, Coles v Coles, L R 1 P & M 70. See also s 151, infra for further elucidation.

Discretion of the Court. Although as we have seen, there are certain general rules governing this subject of leading questions, very much must be left to the discretion of the trial Judge. The subject is one of judicial discretion, and the allowing or refusing leading questions is not generally a ground for appeal.

S 143 Rice v Howard, 16 Q B D 681 London v London, 5 Ir L R N S 27,
Barindia v Emperor, 37 C 467=14 C W N 1114

When they may be asked

143 Leading questions may be asked in cross-examination

Principle The typical situation in which the witness's presumable bias removes all danger of improper suggestion is that of an opponent's witness, under cross-examination. The purpose of the cross examination is to shift his testimony and weaken its force, in short, to discredit the direct testimony, thus, not only the presumable bias of the witness for the opponent's cause but also his sense of reluctance to become the instrument of his own discrediting, deprives him of any inclination to accept the cross examiner's suggestions unless the truth forces him to. Accordingly it is well settled that in cross examination of an opponent's witness, ordinarily no question can be improper as leading. Parkin v Moon, 7 C & P 409. Yet, where the reason ceases the rule ceases also, thus when an opponent's witness proves to be in fact biased in favour of the cross examiner, the danger of leading questions arises and they may be forbidden. The remarks in Hardy's Trial 24 How St Tr 659 in which Mr Erskine was told by L O J Eyre, 'you are not to put the very words in his mouth, even on cross examination', were said of a witness manifestly favourable to the cross examiner, and were not intended to be applied to the ordinary case of a hostile witness. Higmore § 773, Phy Ev 453.

Scope of the section 'Leading questions are admitted in the cross examination of a witness when much larger powers are given to counsel than in the original examination. Witnesses under cross examination may be led immediately to the point on which their answers are required. If they betray a zeal against the cross examining party or show an unwillingness to speak fairly and impartially they may be questioned with minuteness as to particular facts or even particular expressions. There can be no danger in leading too much, where the witness is obstinately determined not to follow.' Ph & Ar Vol II, p 472. So as a general principle leading questions may be put on cross-examination, the objection which would apply to this on an examination in chief not ordinarily holding here. The function of a cross examination is to shift the previous testimony in chief, and the interrogative usually proceeds upon the basis that the sympathies of the witness under examination are in favour of the side originally producing him, and adverse to the one cross examining, while the cross examination takes place under the assumed disadvantage of being addressed to one reluctant to tell. Still the privilege must not be abused the examination must not be made a mockery. Goodere Ev 228. If the witness is in fact favourable to the party cross examining him, it will often weaken the effect of his evidence if he is asked leading questions in cross examination. It must not put the words into the mouth of the witness which he is to echo back again—nor may it assume as its basis, facts as proved which have not been proved—or ascribe to the witness statements by him, which have not been uttered. It is probably not very easy without illustration to convey to a mind not vested in the experience of Courts the precise meaning of the restrictive qualification here noticed. As respects the echoing back of the words the case which first furnished the expression will be the best example and this was one of the state trials,—that of Hardy for high treason—where the question being as to the proceedings of a political society of which Hardy the prisoner was a member and the witness under examination having given a representation of its designs favourable to the prisoner his counsel was proceeding to follow this up by suggesting particular expressions and a king if they had not been used. Chief Justice Eyre thereupon reminded the counsel, that he "could not put the very words into the witness's mouth" and when the subject occurred again on the following day Mr Justice Buller observed "You may lead a witness upon a cross-examination to bring him directly to the point as to the answer but not so the length as was attempted yesterday of putting into the witness's mouth the very words which he is to echo back again." But in a later case, Widerson B stated that the right to lead in cross examination exists whether the witness be favourable or not. Parkin v Moon, 7 C & P 408. In that case the plaintiff's counsel was cross-examining one of the defendant's witness (who it seemed was an unwilling witness for the defendants but a willing one on the part of the plaintiff), by putting leading questions in the usual way. The defendant's counsel submitted that under the circumstances leading questions ought not to be allowed even on cross examination. Alderson B in admitting leading questions said: 'I apprehend you may put leading questions to an unwilling witness on the examination in chief at the discretion of the Judge but you may always put a leading question in cross examination whether a witness be unwilling or not.'

'But the rule' says Mr Taylor 'ought also to receive some further qualification, where the witness is evidently hostile to the party calling him, for although it appears in one case to have been laid down that leading questions may always be put in cross examination, whether a witness be unwilling or not, (Parkin v Moon, 7 C & P 409), some restriction should surely be imposed, where the witness betrays a vehement desire to serve the cross-examining party. It is no answer to say that the party, who originally called the witness has brought the evil on his own head, for a fraudulent witness might purposely conceal his lies in favour of one party, and thus induce the other to call him or he might be an unwitting witness, or other person whom it was necessary to examine in order to establish some technical part of the case. To allow such a witness to have the most favourable answers suggested to him through the medium of leading questions, would be obviously unjust.' Taylor Ex § 1431. In America the Judge in his discretion may prohibit leading questions from being put to an adversary's witness who shows a strong interest or bias in favour of the cross-examining party and needs only an intimation to say whatever is more favourable to his cause. Moody v Rouell, 17 Pick 498, Taylor § 1431.

Misleading questions. A question which assumes a fact that may be in controversy is leading when put on direct examination, because it affords the willing witness a suggestion of a fact which he might otherwise not have stated to the same effect. Conversely such a question may become improper on cross-examination, because it may by implication put into the mouth of an unwilling witness, a statement which he never intended to make, and thus incorrectly attribute to him testimony which is not his. Wignmore § 780. Courteen v Touse 1 Camp 43, Edmonds v Waller 3 Stark 8. The law on the subject was thus laid down by Mr Joseph Chitty in his Practice of the Law 2nd Ed III 91. 'It is an established rule, as regards cross examination that a counsel has no right, even in order to detect or catch a witness in a falsity, falsely to assume or pretend that the witness had previously sworn or stated differently to the fact, or that a matter had previously been proved when it had not. Indeed, if such attempts were tolerated the English Bar would soon be debased below the most inferior of Society.' In Hardy's Trial, 21 How St Tr 751 Mr Erskine cross-examining a witness to the proceedings of an alleged seditious meeting asked: 'Then you were never at any of those meetings but in the character of a spy?'—'As you call it so, I will take it so. — If you were not there as a spy take any title you choose for yourself, and I will give you that.' L C J Eyre. 'There should be no name given to a witness on his examination. He states what he went for, and in making observations on the evidence you may give it any appellation you please.' After repetition of the practice, Mr Gibbs on the other side contended: 'I am sorry to interrupt you, but your question ought not to be accompanied with those sort of comments: they are the proper subjects of observation when the defence is made. The business of a cross-examination is to ask to all sorts of facts, to probe a witness as closely as you can, but it is not the object of a cross-examination to introduce that kind of periphrasis as you have done just now.' Mr Erskine: 'But, on a cross-examination, counsels are not called to be so exact as in an original examination, you are permitted to lead a witness.' L C J Eyre. I think it is so clear that the questions that are put are not to be loaded with all the observations that arise upon all the previous parts of the case they tend so to distract the attention of everybody, they load us in point of time so much and that that is not

S 144 the time for observation upon the character and situation of a witness is so apparent that as a rule of evidence it ought never to have been departed from. Wignall § 780

144 Any witness may be asked, whilst under examination, whether any contract, grant or other disposition of property, as to which he is giving evidence, was not contained in a document and if he says that it was, or if he is about to make any statement as to the contents of any document, which, in the opinion of the Court, ought to be produced, the adverse party may object to such evidence being given until such document is produced, or until facts have been proved which entitle the party who called the witness to give secondary evidence of it

Explanation — A witness may give oral evidence of statements made by other persons about the contents of documents if such statements are in themselves relevant facts

Illustration

The question is whether A assaulted B

C deposes that he heard A say to D — 'B wrote a letter accusing me of theft, and I will be revenged on him.' This statement is relevant as showing A's motive for the assault, and evidence may be given of it, though no other evidence is given about the letter

Object of the section In this section we have a rule for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 91, as to exclusion of oral by documentary evidence, this is, that any witness, who is about to give evidence as to a contract grant or other disposition of property may be asked whether it was not in writing and if he says it was he may be stopped, and the production of the document enforced, or the right to give secondary evidence made out. So this section merely points out the manner in which the provisions of sections 91 and 92, as to the exclusion of oral by documentary evidence may be enforced by the party to the suit. "Documents which in the opinion of the Court might be produced" would of course include the cases referred to in section 91, where the law requires a matter to be reduced to the form of a document. One must, however be taken not to apply it to cases in which oral evidence is given of statements of other people about the contents of documents, when those statements are relevant (vide illustration). Suppose for instance that the question was whether A had murdered B. A witness might prove that A had said 'B's bond is inequitable, I will kill him sooner than pay it,' without the bond being produced the reason obviously being that what the witness wants to prove is not the contents of the document, but A's feeling about the contents of the document as applying a motive for his crime. Qui Ev pp 64 326. Even where the adverse party does not object, it is the duty of the Court not to allow inadmissible evidence. Vide s 298 Criminal Procedure Code. Empire v Panch Kauri, 52 C 67—29 C W N 300. A private diary containing a record of facts contemporaneously made and regularly kept may be used for contradicting or corroborating a witness or refreshing his memory and the like under ss 144 157 and 159 of the Evidence Act, but such user does not make the document itself evidence. Mulundaram v Dayaram, 10 N L R 44—23 Ind Cas 893

145 A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing and relevant to matters in question, without such writing being shown to him, or being proved, but, if it is intended to contradict him by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him

S 145

Cross examination
as to previous statements in writing to contradict him by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him

Object of the section When the contradictory statement alleged to have been made by the witness was contained in a letter or other writing, the rule as laid down by the Judges in the Queen's Case, (2 B & B 286 290 292 291) was that the cross-examining counsel must produce the document as his evidence, and have it read in order to found any questions to the witness upon it. Taylor Ex § 1446, see also Macdonnell v Evans, 11 Com B 930. So it was at that time a matter of considerable discussion in England whether, in the instance in which the contradiction to be insisted on existed in writing, the writing itself should be required to be produced in order to found the question to be put to the witness. It was considered on the one hand, that to allow the examination in the absence of the document, would not only contravene the rule which forbids all use of the contents of a written instrument so long as that instrument is itself producible, but that it might be to leave the Court to the partial contents only of the document, instead of having the whole before it. On the other hand it was urged that to put the document into the hands of the witness would at once requit him with its contents and so to defeat the object of the enquiry. The latter principle has at length prevailed, subject only to the qualification enjoining the production of the writing itself when this is ultimately to be used as the contradiction and placing it at the control of the Judge, and this has been accomplished in England by a further enactment of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1851 (Stat 17 & 18 Vict, Cap 125) s 24. On that section 34 of Act II of 1855 was based. That latter section runs as follows:

A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statement made by him in writing, or reduced into writing, relative to the subject matter of the cause without such writing being shown to him, but if it is intended to contradict such witness by writing his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him. Provided always that it shall be competent for the Judge, at any time during the trial, to require the production of the writing for his inspection, and he may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as he shall think fit. The English Act was restricted to civil cases only but section 34 of Act II of 1855 was equally applicable to civil and criminal cases as well. This section re-enacts the provision of section 34 of Act II of 1855.

Objections to the rule as laid down in Queen's case "The objections to the rule are not difficult to perceive. (1) It does not seem to be required by strict principle. So far as concerns the above rule as to calling the witness's attention to his supposed prior statement, it is entirely satisfied by the counsel's oral inquiry without showing or producing the letter. It is only by the virtue of the Primaries rule that production is required, & the rule 'that the contents of a written instrument, if it be in existence are to be proved by the instrument itself and not by parol evidence' (Per Abbott C J in the Queen's Case, 2 B & B 286). But this rule is not violated here for (a) the cross-examiner is not seeking to prove the document's contents at this stage, but merely to meet the requirement of the law that the witness must be warned that the inconsistent writing will be produced, (b) even where the witness in answer admits executing the document, this does not involve proof of its contents, there is no violation of the Primaries rule (c) even if the counsel sought to take the answer as evidence of the writing's contents the principle of the

S 145

Primariness rule may well be thought not violated, for that principle is based on the possibility of misrepresentation by the party failing to produce the writing, and if he is willing to take the answer of the adversary's witness as evidence of contents, the reason for applying the Primariness rule falls away. (2) From the point of view of policy the prohibition against asking the witness without showing him the writing is an unfortunate one, for 'one of the best test of the memory or the veracity of a witness, the trial of his recollection or candour is to what he has himself written on the subject on which he has just been deposing, is entirely destroyed by his being made aware of the existence and contents of the document,' (Report of the Commissioners), in other words, the chance of showing to the tribunal either that the witness cannot remember or incorrectly remembers or that he is willing to falsify as to the contents, is entirely taken away by the requirement that the writing must be shown to him at that stage. The rule then, so far as it does not allow the counsel to wait until the putting in of his own case, but requires him in advance, before cross-examining, to produce and to show the writing to the witness, is both unsound in principle and unfair in policy. Green Liv § 465(1)

Scope of the section Under this section a witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing, when his attention may be drawn to the parts of the former writing which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. But in the examination in chief before the Court of Session, his attention should not be directed to his deposition before the Magistrate. Queen v Jamchandab, 13 W R 18 Cr. The complainant's pleader was at liberty to cross-examine the witnesses for the defence on points respecting which they had made statements before the Joint Magistrate, and he might do so as regards previous statements which were reduced to writing, without showing the writing. Lukheya Rai v Lupree Koer, 15 W R 23 Cr. In delivering the judgment, Inshie J said: 'We observe that the Deputy Magistrate was altogether wrong in refusing to allow the complainant's pleader in cross-examination to question the witnesses for the defence on points respecting which they had made statements before the Joint Magistrate. He was at liberty to examine on all the facts of the case, as much as if the matter had then been before the Court for the first time. He was, moreover, at liberty to cross-examine the witnesses, as to previous statements made by them and reduced to writing without showing the writing. Section 34 of Act II of 1853, does not say, as the Deputy Magistrate seems to think that the writing must be shown before the cross-examination, but that if it is intended to put in such writing to contradict a witness, his attention must be called to those parts which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him. This is, not that he is to be allowed to study his former statement, and form his answers accordingly, but that, if his answers have differed from his previous statements reduced to writing, and the contradiction is intended to be used as evidence in the case, the witness must be allowed an opportunity of explaining or reconciling his statements, if he can do so, and if this opportunity is not given to him, the contradictory writing cannot be placed on the record as evidence.'

Where a person employed by another for the purpose of writing up his account books had made entries therein on information furnished by that other person, such entries could not be regarded as previous statements made by him in writing, which could be given in evidence to contradict him as witness. Muchershaw v New Dhermsey, 1 B 476.

If the defence wishes to cross-examine a witness on a previous deposition with a view to contradicting him the attention of the witness must be drawn to those discrepancies so that he may have the chance of explaining them. In such a case it is not proper for the Judge to stop the examination and have the whole deposition filed with a view to discrepancies being pointed out at the time of argument. Subbiah v Empeor, 1929 M W N 783. In view of the strict language employed in this section of the Evidence Act a witness is entitled to have his attention specifically drawn to the passages in his statement which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. Any laxity of practice in this respect cannot be condoned. Blayati v Hardkar, 91 L 200 (Rev) = 20 A L J 673 = A I R 1928 All 511.

The deposition of a witness in a criminal trial which has not been read over to the witness is admissible under s 145 of the Evidence Act to contradict a witness at a subsequent trial Fazlu Rahman v Emperor 6 Pat 478=104 Ind Cas 100=28 Cr L J 772=8 Pat L T 773=A I R 1927 Pat 315 Previous statements of a prosecution witness used under s 145 for cross-examining the person or under s 155 of the Evidence Act for discrediting the evidence of the witness cannot be used as substantive evidence against the accused Bishen Dutt v Emperor, 25 A L J 991=105 Ind Cas 677=28 Cr L J 965=A I R 1927 All 705

It is not necessary in order that an accused person may be allowed under s 162 to contradict the witness that the statement must contain the very words used by the witness and that it is sufficient even if the statement is a memorandum of what the witness said to the Police officer Maji Addi v Emperor 45 C L J 561=31 C W N 940=104 Ind Cas 245=28 Cr L J 805=A I R 1927 Cal 644, see also Jadunandan v Emperor, 104 Ind Cas 242=A I R 1927 Oudh 321

Writing need not be produced in absence of intention to contradict Romakka v Nagaram, 92 Ind Cas 133=A I R 1925 Mad 145=48 M L J 89

A statement made by a witness before a coroner is admissible at the trial of the accused for the purpose of impugning the credit of the witness, even though the accused had no opportunity to cross-examine the witness Emperor v Raghuo, 28 Bom L R 775=97 Ind Cas 37=27 Cr L J 1061=A I R 1926 Bom 404

A report made by a Police officer in connection with an enquiry made by him in the exercise of his lawful jurisdiction is not admissible in evidence in a judicial proceeding unless the Police officer is examined as a witness Baldeo Ram v Kunkun Ram 83 Ind Cas 586=A I R 1925 All 808 A witness cannot be disbelieved without his attention being drawn to the documents inconsistent with his deposition even though the documents were produced after his examination. In such a case he should be recalled for further cross-examination Naba Kumar v Rudra Narayan 45 M L J 439=33 M L T 309 (P O)=1923 M W N 623=1923 P C 95, see Mt Anni Begam v Mt Begam, 9 P W R 1914=127 P L R 1914=22 Ind Cas 861

Where the purpose of the production of the document must have been well understood by the witness and from the record of his deposition it was manifest that after being shown the document, he was directly asked whether it was not a fact that he was at a particular place on the alleged date as was clear from the document and when on re-examination no attempt was made to elicit explanation, Held the witness was properly contradicted Bakuntha Nath v Dasanmoyi, 1922 P C 409 Where a Court finds certain discrepancies between a witness's statement made before it and that previously made before another Court, the witness should be asked to explain them as required by s 145 of the Evidence Act Suraj Baksh v Sukdhari, 32 Ind Cas 291 Previous statements, unless used to contradict or discount the evidence of a witness given in the suit, cannot be legitimately used, and even then the particular matter or point must be placed before the witness as one for explanation in view of its discrepancy with the evidence tendered, unless the specific statements are put to the parties sought to be contradicted they cannot be used in evidence Upendra Nath v Bhupendra Nath, 32 Ind Cas 267 The evidence taken in the summary case may be admissible upon the conditions and for the purposes described in the Evidence Act section 145 Nga Sed v Aja Pat, 11 B R (1913) 3rd Qr 181=22 Ind Cas 676 The deposition of a witness in a previous case is not relevant in a subsequent case in which he is examined except to contradict him Queen v Aobo Kinto, 8 W R Cr 87 Although section 145 of the Evidence Act admits of previous statements being referred to, for purpose of cross-examination, it does not authorise a Court to treat such statements as evidence against an accused Jadhua v Emperor, 117 P L R 1911=10 Ind Cas 119=12 Cr I J 214

In a trial for giving false evidence, the record of a previous deposition given by the accused is relevant and necessary evidence Government of Bengal v Gaundo Mahlo, 9 C L J 373=1 Ind Cas 121=10 Cr L J 199

S 145

When the depositions in a former criminal trial were used to contradict the witnesses, but without giving them opportunity to tender their explanation or to clear up the particular points of ambiguity or dispute the procedure was contrary to the general principles and to the specific provision of section 145 of the Evidence Act Balgadhar Pal v Shri Shrinivas Pandit, 19 C W N 729 P C, see also Upendra v Bhupendra 32 Ind Crs 267. It is quite contrary to the Evidence Act to try to impeach a witness by means of contradictory statement unless the contradictory statement is put to him in cross examination Maung San v Emperor, Ind Rul (1930) Rang 91.

Police diaries. It is only what is written in the Police diaries that can be used under s 145 of the Evidence Act to contradict the witness and what the Sub Inspector of Police stated that a witness said or did not say, is inadmissible. The way to prove these portions of the written statement of a witness which have been specifically put to him in order to contradict him is for the accused to mark the passage or passages in the copy from the police diaries given to him and then to ask the writer of the statement to say that it is a true copy Dharam Singh v Emperor, 108 Ind Crs 162=29 Cr L J 343=A I R 1928 Lah 507=9 A I C R 567. If police diary is used the provisions of s 145, Evidence Act and s 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code will have to be borne in mind Kashu Ram v Emperor, 26 A L J 139=9 L R 30 Cr =109 Ind Crs 120=29 Cr L J 172 (2)=A I R 1928 All 280. A Police officer, who recorded the statements cannot be cross examined under section 145 or section 161 of the Evidence Act, with regard to such statements, such cross examinations being allowable only with regard to the entries properly recorded in the diary kept under s 172 Cr Pro Code if the Police officer refers to such entries for the purpose of refreshing his memories Dadon Gazi v Emperor, 33 C 1023=10 C W N 890=4 Cr L J 79.

Where a police officer making an investigation under this section took statements from the persons who were afterwards called as witnesses the accused person would be entitled to call for and inspect such documents and cross examine the witness thereon, as such statements would not amount to a portion of the diary referred to in section 172 Bikas v Queen Empress, 16 C 610, Sheru Sha v Queen Empress, 20 C 642 Emperor v Ruda Singh, (1896) A W, N 193, Empress v Sadara Peli 9 C P L R 33, see also Sadhu Sheikh v Emperor, 32 C W N 250. A statement made by a witness to the police can be used only to contradict the witness Emperor v Jyoti Bhat 22 B 596, King Emperor v Kumasamuthu 20 Cr L J 254 Bhulal v King Emperor 11 Cr L J 117=73 O C 7. Only those portions of the statements of witnesses made before the police have been actually used under s 162 Criminal Procedure Code, to contradict the witness in the manner provided in s 145 Evidence Act, in the course of their cross examination or re-examination are parts of the judicial record and can be treated as evidence in the case, the other parts of these statements cannot be relied upon by the prosecution or the defence in determining the guilt or innocence of the accused Subhai v Emperor Ind Rul (1930) Lah 162.

First Information report—admissibility and value of. The statement of a person recorded by the police as a first information report can be proved to corroborate that person's evidence in Court under the provisions of s 157 of the Evidence Act or to impeach his credit by cross-examination under s 145 of the Act provided that the procedure there prescribed is observed Thakur Singh v Emperor, 107 Ind Crs 761=26 Cr L J 277=9 A I C R 716, see also Hayat v Emperor 107 Ind Crs 766=29 Cr L J 282=10 Lah L J 389=A I R 1928 Lah 380, Madari Sikdar v Emperor, 51 C 30=28 Cr L J 582.

Under section 162, Cr Pro Code, the witness has to be called for the prosecution that is to say he must be produced in Court and if then the accused applies for copy of his statement before the police recorded in writing the Court is bound to refer to the writing and to direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof subject to the proviso that if the Court is of opinion that any part of such statement is not relevant to the subject matter of the enquiry or trial or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interest of justice and is expedient in the public interests then the Court shall record such opinion and exclude such part from the copy furnished to the accused. When this copy has been given, any part of the statement, if duly proved can be used in the manner provided by the writing Ramgulam v Emperor 7 Pat 205=9 Lah L T 92=107 Ind Cas 817=29 Cr L J 297=A I R 1928 Pat 215, see also Emperor v Ram Rang, 109 Ind Cas 231=29 Cr L J 493=A I R 1929 826, Haroon Singh v Emperor, 9 Lah 389=108 Ind Cas 167=29 Cr L J 348=A I R 1928 Lah 257 Emperor v Ahmad, 106 Ind Cas 350=29 Cr L J 14=A I R 1928 Lah 144. The statements to the police must be definitely put to the witness under s 145 of the Evidence Act, in order to contradict him Emperor v Ibrahim, 8 Lah 605=105 Ind Cas 807=28 P L R 649.

Statements made by third parties to the police in the course of their investigation are admissible to contradict under s 145 of the Evidence Act provided the person who made the statement is called as a witness Amuddy v Emperor 41 C L J 253=A I R 1927 Cal 17. The first information report against the accused is admissible under s 145 of the Indian Evidence Act and may be relied on by the defence to contradict the informant Ibid. But where the attention of the witness was not directed to the statement made by him in the first information report in accordance with the procedure laid down in s 145, that statement cannot be used for the purpose of contradicting the evidence given by him in Court Mohna v Emperor 7 Lah L J 59=26 Cr L J 774=86 Ind Cas 406=A I R 1925 Lah 328. A statement made to a police officer could only be made evidence when used for the purpose of cross-examining the person who made it Mahomed v Emperor, 89 Ind Cas 203=26 Cr L J 1308, Badri v Emperor 6 Pat L T 620, Emperor v Vithu, 26 Bom L R 905=A I R 1921 Bom 510.

So far as proceedings before charge are concerned copies of statements to police under s 162 Criminal Procedure Code should not be granted until the stage of cross examination is reached. If that stage is allowed to go by without application being made, an accused must wait until the witness is again about to be subjected to cross-examination before he can claim grant of a copy. Upon a request for a copy being made, the Court must necessarily afford the accused a reasonable opportunity for obtaining it before he is deprived of the opportunity to cross-examine upon it Public Prosecutor v Veda, Ind Rul (1930) Mad 301.

Under s 162 a statement made before the investigating officer can be used for the purpose of contradicting such witness when produced at the trial but after strict compliance with the provisions of s 145 of the Evidence Act Gopal Chand v Emperor, A I R 1930 Lah 491 see also Sabhai v Emperor, A I R 1930 Lah 449.

Deposition before Magistrate The statement of a witness which he made before the Magistrate who tried the case cannot be used to discredit the evidence which the witness gave later unless his previous statement has been brought into evidence on cross-examination Sawan v Emperor 7 Lah L J 339=90 Ind Cas 657=26 Cr L J 1585=26 P L R 811=A I R 1925 Lah 499. Where the Session Judge wishes to use depositions taken before the committing Magistrate he should record them as exhibits in his own Court, and not read them to the jury without reading them to the witness or exhibiting them Queen Empress v Soma Dahi, Rit Un Cr C 924=Cr Rg 29 of 1897. Statements recorded under s 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code may be used under s 145 of the Evidence Act, as a basis of cross-examination Queen Empress v Ramdin, Rat. Un Cr C 728=Cr Rg 56 of 1891. The counsel for the prisoner in a Sessions trial, is not entitled to refer to the depositions given before the committing Magistrate for the purposes of contradicting the witnesses in the Sessions trial, without having drawn their attention to the alleged contradiction in their depositions before the committing Magistrate, and without giving them an opportunity for explaining Emperor v Zauan Rahman 31 C 142 (F B)=1 Cr L J 86 (F B) overruling Queen v Hancharan, 6 C L R 390. The Judge is bound to put to the witnesses, whom he proposes to contradict by their previous statements, the whole or such portion of their depositions as he

- S 146. intends to rely upon so as to afford them an opportunity of explaining their meaning, or denying that they had made any such statements and so forth Queen Empress v. Dan Sahai 7 A 862, see also Lachmi Lal v. King Emperor 1 P L 1 398, Queen v. Brindaban, 5 W R Cr 51. No doubt when depositions before the committing Magistrate are admitted in Sessions Court under s 289 they are on the same footing with any other evidence in the case. But s 111 Evidence Act governs the position so far as these statements are used for contradicting the witness either mainly or incidentally. Depositions therefore taken in the committing Magistrate's Court which contradict the evidence given in the Sessions Court, cannot, however be put in without putting them to the witness. Natha v. Emperor, A I R 1930 Pat 138. see also Lachmi Lal v. Emperor, A I R 1922 Pat 10. Queen Empress v. Dan Sahai 7 A 862.

When the writing is lost or destroyed. If it appear from the cross-examination of the witness, or from any antecedent evidence that the writing in question has been lost or destroyed, the provision tentatively empowering the Judge to require its production will of course become inoperative. In such a case, therefore, it is apprehended that the witness might be cross-examined as to the contents of the paper notwithstanding its non-production, and that if it were material to the issue, he might be afterwards contradicted by secondary evidence. Still the question remains as to whether the cross-examining party might first interpose evidence out of his own turn to prove the loss or destruction of the document or to show that it was in the hands of the opponent, that he had notice to produce it, and that he refused to do so, and might then cross-examine the witness as to its contents. Taylor § 1447. Greene Ex § 164.

Admission not put to party. When an admission is not put to the party making it and the party making it is not examined on it under s 145 the admission is not legal evidence and cannot be used against such party. Muharram v. Barlat, A I R, 1930 Lah 695, Safiquddin v. Madhub, A I R 1933 Lah 711.

116 When a witness is cross examined, he may, in addition to the questions herebefore referred to, be asked any questions which tend—Questions lawful in cross examination

- (1) to test his veracity,
- (2) to discover who he is and what is his position in life, or
- (3) to shake his credit, by injuring his character, although the answer to such questions might tend directly or indirectly to exonerate him or might expose or tend directly or indirectly to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture.

Scope of the section. Sections 132, 146, 147 and 148 together embrace the whole range of questions which can properly be addressed to a witness. R v. Gopal Das 3 M 271 (278). In section 132 it is stated that cross-examination must relate to relevant facts. In addition to questions on those facts a witness can be asked any questions as regards the facts mentioned in this section. So this section extends the power of cross-examination far beyond the limits of section 138 which confines the cross-examination to relevant facts, including facts in issue. Malby Ex p 106. All the questions covered by s 116 are governed by the provisions of ss 148-153. Ibid p 107. Sections 148-152 were intended to protect the witness against being improperly cross-examined. Ibid p 107. Cross-examination to credit is necessarily irrelevant to any issue in the action its relevancy consists in being addressed to the credit or discredit of the witness in the case so as to show that his evidence for or against the relevant issue is untrustworthy, it is most relevant in a case like the present where everything depends on the Judge's belief or disbelief in the witness's story and to excuse him and actually accept his story on the ground that he was uncomfortable when he was hown to be a fraudulent falsifier of accounts is to adopt a course which their Lordships cannot follow" Per Sir George Farwell, in Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co Ltd v Rajah Bahadur Motilal Shrinil 19 C W N 617=17 Bom L R 445=39 B 386 P C. The statement of a witness being testimonial in their nature it is right to subject them, when admitted to impeachment in the appropriate ways, as it was to require the usual testimonial qualification in advance. Wigmore § 884. So "it is no doubt competent for the party to put almost any question, upon cross examination which he may consider important to test the accuracy or veracity of the witness" Per Redfield J in Stevens v Bearh 12 Vt 587. "A witness may always be subjected to a strict cross-examination as a test of his accuracy his understanding his integrity, his biases, and his means of judging" Per Hubbard J in Perkins v Adams 5 Mete 18. "In cross-examination, an adverse party is usually allowed great latitude of enquiry, limited only by the sound discretion, of the Court, with a view to test the memory, the purity of principle, the skill, the accuracy and judgment of the witness the consistency of his answers with each other and with his present testimony his life and habits, his feelings towards the parties respectively and the like, to enable the jury to judge of the degree of confidence they may safely place in his testimony" Per Shaw, C J in Hathaway v Crocker 7 Mete 266, Wigmore § 944.

The purpose of the cross-examination is to test the truthfulness candour, intelligence, memory, bias or interest of the witness, and any question to that end within reason is usually allowed. The fact that a question may tend to disprove the witness is no objection to it, provided it is fairly directed towards testing the veracity of the witness. McKenney's Et § 29. It is permissible under this section to cross examine a witness as to his credit but when questions have been put to him to impeach his credit and he has answered them the examination of further witnesses to disprove his answers is not allowed. Maung San v Emperor, Ind Rul (1930) Rang 91.

To test his veracity. A witness may be cross examined not only as to the relevant facts but also as to all facts which reasonably tend to affect the credibility of his testimony. This is generally spoken of as cross examination to credit, in as much as a large part at any rate of the facts which are relied on for the purpose are facts which touch the credit and good name of the witness. But this term is perhaps somewhat misleading as suggesting that any cross examination is permissible which tends in any way whatever to disparage the character of the witness where is no such cross examination can be legitimate unless it has some reasonable bearing on his credibility that is to say, his means of knowledge, or the accuracy of his memory or his truthfulness. Hulls Et 2nd Ed 323. The general rule as to impeaching the veracity of one's opponent's witnesses was thus stated by Lord Herschell in the case of Broune v Dunn 61 The Reports (H L). "I cannot help saying that it seems to be absolutely essential to the proper conduct of a case, where it is intended to suggest that a witness is not speaking the truth on a particular point, to direct his attention to the fact by some questions put in cross examination showing that imputation is intended to be made, and not to take his evidence and pass it by as a matter altogether unchallenged, and then, when it is impossible for him to explain, as perhaps he might have been able to do if such questions had been put to him, the circumstances which it is suggested indicate that the story he tells ought not to be believed to argue that he is a witness unworthy of credit. My lord, I have always understood that if you intend to impeach a witness you are bound, whilst in the box, to give him an opportunity of making any explanation which is open to him, and, as it seems to me that is not only a rule of professional practice in the conduct of a case but it is essential to fair play and fair dealing with witnesses. Sometimes reflections have been made upon excessive cross examination of witnesses, and it has been complained of as undue but it seems to me that a cross-examination of a witness which errs in the direction of cases may be far more fair to him than to leave him without

S 146. cross examination, and afterwards to suggest that he is not a witness of truth, I mean upon a point on which it is not otherwise perfectly clear that he has had full notice beforehand that there is an intention to impeach the credibility of the story which he is telling. Of course I do not deny for a moment that there are cases in which that notice has been so distinctly and unmistakably given, and the point upon which he is impeached, and is to be impeached is so manifest that it is not necessary to waste time in putting questions to him upon it. All I am saying is that it will not do to impeach the credibility of a witness upon a matter on which he has not had any opportunity of giving an explanation by reason of there having been no suggestion whatever in the course of the case that his story is not accepted.

To discover who he is and what is his position etc. As preliminary to the cross examination of a witness as to facts in the case, it is common practice to make inquiry into his relations with the party on whose behalf he was called—business social and family, also to enquire as to his feelings towards the party against whom his testimony has been given. This is permissible in order to place his testimony in a proper light with reference to bias in favour of the one party, or prejudice against the other. Mchellrey's Ev § 259. "The range of external circumstances from which probably bias may be inferred is infinite. Too much refinement in analysing their probable effect is out of place. Accurate concrete rules are almost impossible to formulate, and where possible are usually undesirable. In general, these circumstances should have some clearly apparent force, as tested by experience of human nature or, as it is usually put they should not be too remote. Among the commoner sorts of circumstances are all those involving some intimate family relationship to one of the parties by blood or marriage or illicit intercourse (Thomas v David 7 C & P 350), or some such relationship to a person other than a party, who is involved on one or the other side of the litigation or is otherwise prejudiced for or against one of the parties. The relation of employment, present or past, by one of the parties is also usually relevant. The tendency of civil litigation between the witness and the opponent is usually relevant not only as a circumstance tending to create feeling but also as involving conduct expressive of feeling, and while the mere fact of litigation upon a disconnected matter may not necessarily show bias still it is useless to attempt to distinguish and refine for the purpose of exclusion. That the witness is or has been under indictment may have several bearings, (1) if the indictment, present or past, was had by the opponent's procurement or for an injury to him, it is relevant as having tended to excite in the witness a hostile feeling to him. (2) if the indictment was procured by the opponent against another party to the cause, it is relevant as an expression of hostile feelings usable against the opponent as a witness. (3) if it is now pending over a witness for the prosecution or for the accused in a criminal case it is relevant to show the witness interest in testifying favourably for that side. Beyond these common varieties of circumstances, no generalization can be attempted. New circumstances will constantly be presented, as suggestive of personal prejudice and the decision should be left entirely in the hands of the trial Judge." Wigmore § 949.

Character, meaning of. In explanation to section 55 of the Evidence Act, character is defined to include both reputation and disposition, so far as sections 52, 53, 54 and 55 are concerned. In this section no definition of character is given. "That which induces us to believe" says Prof Wigmore "that a witness is or is not likely to be speaking truthfully is usually some circumstance of his actual personality. Just as his knowledge and his recollection his sanity and maturity of age as bearing on his qualifications for admission are actual qualities somewhere existent in or attributable to him, so also the moral character, the bias, or the corruption which tend to discredit him and affect the probability of his truthfulness are actual qualities, having probative force because conceived of as existent in or attributed to him. It may be necessary, in establishing one or more of these qualities to resort to reputation or other evidence, but the reputation is not the immediate basis of our reference as to his probable truth telling. Reputation is not resorted to at all for the purpose of discovering his bras, his knowledge, his recollection, and the like, and the fact that it is resort ed to for ascertaining his moral disposition must not be allowed to obscure the important truth that the thing immediately important is the actual disposition, and not the reputation " Wigmore § 920

S 146.

Kind of character, Veracity as the Fundamental Quality From the point of view of modern psychology, the moral disposition which tends for or against falsehood is an elusive quality. Its intermittent operation in connection with other tendencies and the difficulty of ascertaining its quality and force, make it by no means a feature peculiarly reliable in the diagnosis of testimonial credit. In determining the relevancy of character as affecting the credit to be given to a witness, the first question is what kind of character is relevant?
Since the argument is to be against or for the probability of his now telling the truth upon the stand, it is obvious that the quality or tendency which will here aid in his quality or tendency as to truth telling in general i.e., his veracity, or is more commonly and more loosely put his character for truth. This must be and is universally conceded to be the immediate basis for inference. Character for truth is always and everywhere admissible.
Moreover any other trait or quality, or combination of them is relevant only so far as involving necessarily or probably, the presence or absence of this quality as to truth telling. This leads us to the chief topic of controversy in this department, namely whether bad moral character in general or some other specific bad quality in particular is admissible. The argument for the use of bad general character to discredit a witness is in brief that it necessarily involves an impairment of the truth telling capacity that to show general moral degeneration is to show an inevitable degeneration in veracity, and that the former is often more easily betrayed to observation than is the latter. Wigmore § 922. The argument in favour of the above statement is thus forcefully stated by Former J in State v Boswell 2 Dev 210, "Should a witness whose general character is proverbially bad as to licentiousness and lewdness, who is in his habits regardless of the precepts of religion and reckless of the consequences of vice, be entitled to the same credit as another whose character is without stain, and whose whole life has been marked by piety, virtue and truth? An unprincipled man, although grovelling in other vices which he has long practised, may for selfish purposes artfully conceal the weakness of his character on the score of veracity. Should not such habits lessen the weight and impair the credit of a witness, although he may have established no general character bad as to truth? 'The arguments made in answer to these' says
Prof Wigmore 'are chiefly three (1) that, as a matter of human nature a bad general disposition does not necessarily or commonly involve a lack of veracity, and that therefore the former is of little or no bearing probatively, (2) that the estimate of an ordinary witness is to another's bad general character is apt to be formed loosely from uncertain data and to rest in large part but on personal prejudice and on mere differences of opinion on points of belief or conduct,—a chance of error which is relatively small in the specific enquiry as to the other's notorious untruthfulness and (3) that the incidental unpleasant features of the witness-box are largely increased when the way is opened to this broad and loose method of abusing those who are called as witnesses" Wigmore § 922.
It has been truly said by Zabriske CJ in Atwood v Impson, 20 N J Eq 157, that 'with many telling the truth is a habit and a principle which they adhere to always, though they may indulge in drinking, swearing, gambling, roystering or making close bargains. With others, lying is the habit or principle and if elevated to be senators or legislators, or made church members or deacons, it does not always reform them. The object of the law is to show the character of the witness as to telling the truth. Wigmore Ibid. In England for the purposes of proving character by repute, general character is excluded, and character for veracity only is stated. Wigmore § 923.

Intimidating and annoying questions by cross examiner 'An intimidating manner in putting questions may so coerce or disconcert the witness that his answers do not represent his actual knowledge on the subject. So also questions which in form or subject cause embarrassment, shame or anger

S 146

in the witness may unfairly lead him to such demeanour and utterance that the impression produced by his statements does not do justice to his real testimonial value. These are two of the notorious abuses of cross examination and always have been, both in the early period when it was still chiefly used by Judges only, and also since the time of its mature elaboration, more than a century ago, as the greatest weapon of truth ever forged. Those abuses, it is true, are in a whole probably less to day than they formerly were, but they are in many places still not uncommon. They are too frequent when they occur at all. The just denunciations of high minded Judges have sometimes stigmatized these practices as they deserve, and there can be no doubt that the law sanctions the power and establishes the duty of the trial Judge to use a proper discretion to prevent and rebuke them. Wignmore § 781

"The abuse of cross examination has been widely discussed in England in recent years partly in consequence of the cross examination of a Mrs Bravo, whose husband has died by poison. He had lived unhappily with her on account of the attentions of a certain physician. During this inquiry into the circumstances of her husband's death the story of the wife's intrigues was made public through her cross examination. Sir Charles Russell who was then regarded as standing at the head of the Bar both in the extent of his business and in his success in Court, and Eduard Clark one of Her Majesty's law officers, with a high reputation for ability in jury trials were severely criticised as 'forensic bullies' and complained of as 'lending the authority of their example to the abuse of cross examination to credit which was quickly followed by hurristers of inferior positions among whom the practice was spreading of assailing witness with what was not unfairly called a system of insidious suggestions and bullying from which sensitive persons recoil. And Mr Charles Gill one of the many imitators of Russell's domineering style was criticised as 'bettering the instructions of his elders

"The complaint against Russell was that by his practices as displayed in the Osborne case—robbery of jewels—not only may a man's or a woman's whole past be laid bare to malignant comment and public curiosity, but there is no means afforded by the Courts of showing how the facts really stood or of producing evidence to repel the damaging charges

Lord Bramwell in an article published originally in Nineteenth Century of February 1892, and republished in legal periodicals all over the world, strongly defends the methods of Sir Charles Russell and his imitators. Lord Bramwell claimed to speak after an experience of forty seven years practices at the Bar and on the Bench and long acquaintance with the legal profession

"A Judge's sentence for a crime however much repented of, is not the only punishment there is the consequent loss of character in addition, which should confront such a per on whenever called to the witness stand. 'Women who carry on illicit intercourse, and whose husband die of poison must complain it baring the veil that ordinarily screens a woman's life from public inquiry rudely torn aside'. It is well for the sake of truth that there should be a wholesome dread of cross-examination. 'It should be understood to be no trivial matter but rather looked upon as a trying ordeal'. None but the sore feel the probe such were some of the arguments of the various upholders of broad license in examinations to credit

"Lord Chief Justice Colburn took the opposite view of the question. 'I deeply deplore that members of the Bar so frequently unnecessarily put questions affecting the private life of witnesses, which are only justifiable when they challenge the credibility of a witness. I have watched closely the administration of justice in France Germany, Holland Belgium, Italy, and a little in Spain, as well as in the United States in Canada and in Ireland, and in no place have I seen witnesses so haggard browbeaten and in every way so brutally maltreated as in England. The way in which we treat our witnesses is a national disgrace and a serious obstacle, instead of aiding the ends of justice. In England the most honourable and conscientious men to take the witness box. Men and women of all ranks shrink with terror from subjecting themselves to the wanton insult and bullying named cross-examination in our English Courts. Watch the tre nor that passes through the frames of many persons as they enter the witness box I remember to have seen undistinguished in him as the late Sir Benjamin Brodie, shiver as he entered the witness box. I dare say his apprehension amounted to exquisite torture. Witnesses are just as necessary for the administration of justice as Judges or jurymen and are entitled to be treated with the same consideration, and their affairs and private lives ought to be held as sacred from the gaze of the public as those of the Judges or the jurymen. I venture to think that it is the duty of a Judge to allow no question to be put to a witness unless such as are clearly pertinent to the issue before the Court except where the credibility of the witness is deliberately challenged by counsel and that the credibility of a witness should not be wantonly challenged on slight grounds.' Wellman's Art of Cross-examination pp 175-178

S 147

S 148

147 If any such question relates to a matter relevant to

When witness to be the suit or proceeding, the provisions of section 132 shall apply thereto compelled to answer

If such question etc The word such it is presumed refers to the last clause of the preceding section and not to the word "any" in the earlier part of that section. None but relevant questions can be asked in cross examination (Section 133, clause 2). But relevancy is of a twofold character, it may be directly relevant in its bearing on, elucidating, or disproving the very merits of the points in issue. In such a case the witness is not protected from answering notwithstanding the answer may criminate him. For section 132 is made applicable to this case. There is another kind of relevancy which is collateral to the issue. Such is the character of the witness, which is always relevant because if he is dishonest no faith can be put in the story he utters. Where questions are put to a witness not for the purpose of proving or disproving the point in issue but exclusively and merely to show what is the character of the witness, the Court is to decide whether the question is to be answered or not. This appears to differ from section 32 of Act II of 1855 which draw no distinction between the several kinds of relevancy. Under that Act a witness was bound to answer every criminating question while the proviso threw a protection over him from all criminal consequences, other than those attaching to perjury. Noti Ex 329

148 If any such question relates to a matter not relevant

Court to decide when question shall be asked and when witness compelled to answer want to the suit or proceeding, except in so far as it affects the credit of the witness by injuring his character, the Court shall decide whether or not the witness shall be compelled to answer it, and may, if it thinks fit, warn the witness that he is not obliged to answer it. In exercising its discretion, the Court shall have regard to the following considerations —

- (1) such questions are proper if they are of such a nature that the truth of the imputation conveyed by them would seriously affect the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies
- (2) such questions are improper if the imputation which they convey relates to matters so remote in time, or of such a character, that the truth of the imputation would not affect, or would affect in a

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

- slight degree, the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies
- (3) such questions are improper if there is a great disproportion between the importance of the imputation made against the witness's character and the importance of his evidence
- (4) the Court may, if it sees fit, draw, from the witness's refusal to answer, the inference that the answer if given would be unfavourable

Scope of the section. Such questions mean the questions referred to in clause (3) of section 146. Where questions are put to a witness not for the purpose of proving or disproving the point in issue, but exclusively and merely to show what is the character of the witness, the Court is to decide whether the question is to be answered or not. Nor is it to decide whether the witness, or expose him to penalty or forfeiture. It is necessary however to make careful provision against so powerful an engine being oppressively or wantonly employed. It would be grievous hardship if every person who came forward to give evidence was liable to the expense of an unscrupulous cross-examiner to give every detail of his life dragged into the light and to be forced to reply to interrogations which suggest what the interrogator dares not assert, and thus are merely slanders in disguise. So the Judge accordingly is confided with the view of testing or injuring the witness's character. When a question is asked merely for this purpose the Court is to decide whether the witness is to be compelled or not to answer it. In deciding whether such a question is proper or not, the Court is to consider firstly, whether the imputation conveyed by it is such as seriously to affect the Court's opinion as to the witness's veracity, or whether from remoteness of time or from its character it would affect it only in a very slight degree, and secondly whether there is great disproportion between the importance of the imputation conveyed and the importance of the evidence given. If the evidence is very unimportant and the imputation on the witness's character very serious the question ought not to be asked. A witness for instance who proves the posting of a letter and the imputation on his reputation ought not to be asked questions as to which might blast provided that the Court may infer from the witness's refusal to answer that the answer if given would be unfavourable to him, but that it is not bound to do so. Cunn Lj pp 65-66

In Queen v Gopal Das 3 W 271 (278), Rane G J said. Irrelevant questions should not be allowed and it may be implied from the limitation in this section (s 132) that a witness should be excused from answering questions tending to criminate as to matters which are irrelevant. To understand this section it is desirable to consider it in connection with the subsequent sections 146, 147, 148 in as much as they together embrace the whole range of questions which can properly be addressed to a witness. By section 133 it is enacted that a witness must be examined and cross-examined as to relevant facts, and by section 146 it is enacted that in cross-examination he may also be asked any question which may tend to test his veracity or to discover who he is and what is his position in life or to shew his credit by injuring his character though the answer may tend directly or indirectly to criminate him. If any such question relates to a matter relevant to a matter in issue, which I understand no more than was meant by section 147 declared applicable to it the provisions of section 132 are by section 147 declared applicable to it. If the question is as to a matter relevant only, in so far as affects the credit of the witness by injuring his character, the Court is by section 148 directed to decide whether or not the witness is to be compelled to answer, and may (I presume if it does not think fit to compel him to answer) warn the witness that he is not obliged to answer it. The decision of the Court as to whether or not it shall compel an answer is to be governed by the considerations declared in the section. When there is a question asked to which the answer may lead to criminate a witness, he may object that it is not as to a matter relevant to a matter in issue, or that, if relevant it is relevant only as affecting his credit by injuring his character. In the former case if the question is insisted on, the Court will compel the witness to answer it, in the latter, it will determine whether or not, in reference to the rule which is to guide its decision it should or should not compel the witness to answer.

"If the term 'compelled' in the proviso to section 132 and 'compel' in section 148 do not refer to the Court, but to the obligation of the law then the witness is left without protection if the Court arrives at an erroneous conclusion as to whether or not the question is as to a matter which the witness is bound to answer, or if he has incautiously answered an irrelevant question. On the other hand, if the term refers to the constraint put upon the witness by the authority before whom he is examined, he is protected whether that authority has decided rightly or wrongly that the question is such as the witness is bound to answer. If it had been the intention of the Legislature to protect the witness whenever he was, or believed himself to be constrained by law to give an answer criminating himself, then this intention could clearly have been expressed in very much more simple language, and if unlearned persons, not assisted by counsel, are not to be placed in a worse position than persons who are acquainted with the law or have the benefit of professional assistance I can suggest no reason why the protection should not have been extended to all answers whether relevant or irrelevant. The term of section 132, especially when read with the rest of the Act, impel me to the conclusion that protection is afforded only to answers to which a witness has objected or has been constrained by the Court to give. I am led to the same conclusion by a consideration of the alteration that was called for in the English Law of Evidence, which the Indian Legislature appear to have had in view. Except where otherwise provided by special enactment, it was a rule of English Law that no witness was bound to give evidence which would criminate himself and if a witness objected on this ground to answer a question put to him and the Court considered the objection well founded, it excused him from answering it, on the other hand, if the Court improperly refused to excuse the witness, and compelled him to answer his answer could not be used against him to support a criminal charge except a charge of having given false evidence by his answer."

In the same case Muthusami Appai J at p 235 said "Section, 148, which confers upon a witness the privilege of not answering a criminating question that is material only in so far as it injures his character, and thereby affects his credit, expressly gives power to the Judge to warn the witness that he need not criminate himself until it is decided that the question must be answered."

Clause (3)—So remote "On analysing the nature of the argument from witness's character, we find it to be really this. The moral qualities of the person who is now speaking to us from the stand can throw some light on the probability of his truthfulness, because as he speaks they will influence him to be sincere or the reverse, let us therefore inquire into his quality in that respect. Obviously, our argument, because it believes in the present influence of the testifier's disposition upon his testimony, expects and requires us to exhibit to the tribunal his present character. This much seems indisputable. But it is equally obvious that the nature of the witness's character at the precise moment of his utterance is practically not ascertainable directly. We may have to go back only an hour or a day or a week, but we are at least going back some space of time when we call for either personal knowledge (of another witness) or reputation, which cannot possibly carry the proof down to the precise moment of utterance and, besides this the character of a former period, more or less distant, always enters into every estimate (reputed or individual) of character, even though it may be expressly predicated as of the present

S 149 moment Nevertheless, there is nothing improper, in this resorting, in put
 S 150 or entirely to the character of a prior time We are simply adding another
 S 151 step to the argument for while first using present character to throw light on the probability of stating the truth, we then have this present character to prove in its turn and we argue from prior character to the probability of its persistence at the time of utterance The second step of the argument is an entirely legitimate one, it is merely the ordinary argument from a past condition, having features of permanency, to the continuance of the condition at a later time Higmore § 927 But questions regarding the character of a witness in a very remote period should be allowed to be put by the Judge In Emperor v Ghulam Mustafa 26 A 371 the Court at p 374 said We think that looking to the appellant's subsequent history it is to be regretted that a Magistrate allowed such a stale charge to be dragged to light and that he would have shown a wiser discretion had he, according to the principle embodied in section 148 of the Evidence Act refused to allow the question to be put on the ground that it related to a matter which had happened thirty years before and was so remote in time that it ought not to influence his decision as to the fitness of the surety

149 No such question as is referred to in section 148
 Question not to be asked without reasonable grounds ought to be asked, unless the person asking it has reasonable grounds for thinking that the imputation which it conveys is well founded

Illustrations

(a) A barrister is instructed by an attorney or vakil that an important witness is a dākt. This is a reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dākt.

(b) A pleader is informed by a person in Court that an important witness is a dākt, the informant on being questioned by the pleader gives satisfactory reasons for his statement. This is a reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dākt.

(c) A witness of whom nothing whatever is known, is asked at random whether he is a dākt. There are here no reasonable grounds for the question.

(d) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, being questioned as to his mode of life and means of living gives unsatisfactory answers. This may be a reasonable ground for asking him if he is a dākt.

150 If the Court is of opinion that any such question was asked without reasonable grounds, it may, if it was asked by any barrister, pleader, vakil or attorney, report the circumstances of the case to the High Court or other authority to which such barrister, pleader, vakil or attorney is subject in the exercise of his profession.

151 The Court may forbid any questions or inquiries indecent and scandalous which it regards as indecent or scandalous, although such questions or inquiries may have some bearing on the questions before the Court, unless they relate to facts in issue, or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed.

152 The Court shall forbid any question which appears S 152

Questions intended to it to be intended to insult or annoy, to insult or annoy or which, though proper in itself, appears to the Court needlessly offensive in form

Questions in cross examination No question is referred to in section 118 of the Indian Evidence Act ought to be asked unless the person asking it has some reasonable grounds for supposing the imputation which it conveys to be true. Barristers, attorneys and other professional persons offending against this rule are liable to be reported to the High Court or other authority to which they are subordinate. Cun Ee 66. The illustrations to s 149 show that the reasonable grounds which justify such questions may be much slighter than would justify a man in making an imputation under other circumstances. A barrister who is told a discrediting fact by an attorney or a villain or a pleader who hears such a fact from a person who appears to know about it is justified in so far as assuming its truth as to question a witness about it and he may even do so with no other justification than the witness's unsatisfactory reply. Cun Ee 381.

According to the common Law of England, "neither party, witness, counsel, jury, or Judge can be put to answer civilly or criminally, for words spoken in office." Per Lord Mansfield in R v Skinner 1 Lofft 55. In Hodgson v Scarlett 1 B & B 232, it was held by Lord Ellenborough C. J. that an action for defamation will not lie against a barrister for words spoken by him as counsel in a cause pertinent to the matter in issue. In Kennedy v Brown, 3 L J C P N S 137 Earle C J said. "The advocate is trusted with interests and privileges and powers, almost to an unlimited degree. His client must trust to him at times for fortune and character and life. The law trusts him with a privilege in respect of liberty of speech which is in practice bounded only by his own sense of duty, and he may have to speak upon subjects concerning the deepest interests of social life and the innermost feelings of human soul. His words and acts ought to be guided by a sense of duty—that is to say duty to his client—binding him in every faculty and privilege and power in order that he may attain that client's rights together with duty to the Court and himself binding him to guard against the abuse of the powers and privileges intrusted to him, by a constant recourse to his own sense of right." See also Daulins v Lord Roxby L R 8 Q B 255. Muster v Lamb, 11 Q B D 558. Section 150 refers to questions put in cross examination by any barrister, pleader, villain or attorney of the class referred to in s 148 and gives the Court the power if such Court is of opinion that such question was asked without reasonable grounds to report the circumstances to the High Court, but it limits the scope of the section to questions asked under the circumstances mentioned in section 148. Sullivan v Norton, 10 M 28 (35).

When Counsel in the course of cross examination makes a charge against a witness or third parties the Court is entitled to ask whether he made the charge on instruction and if so on whose. Instructions to Counsel are privileged only in the sense of being protected from disclosure to the opponent. There is no privilege as against the Court. The Court's disciplinary power over advocates in relation to questions put in cross-examination is not confined to questions reflecting on the witness personally, but extends to questions reflecting on third parties as well. It is not sufficient for Counsel in such cases even to plead instructions; they have a responsibility in the matter and are not justified in making charges of fraud and crime unless they are personally satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for putting them forward. Donald Weston v Peary Mohan 18 C W N 185=40 C 598.

"The bill is originally drawn up provided, in substance that no person should be asked a question which reflected on his character as to matters irrelevant to the case before the Court, without instructions and if the Court considered the question improper it might require the production of the instructions, and the giving of such instructions should be an act of defamation subject, of course, to the various rules about defamation laid down in the Penal

S 152. Code To ask such questions without instruction, was to be a contempt of Court in the person asking them, but was not to be defamation. This proposal caused a great deal of criticism, and in particular produced memorials from the Birs of the three Presidencies. It was also objected to by most of the Local Governments to whom the Bill was referred for opinion. Some of the objections made to the proposal were I thought, well founded. It was pointed out, in the first place, that the difficulty of obtaining the written instructions would be practically insuperable, in the next place that the Native Bar throughout the country were already subject to forms of discipline which were practically sufficient, and in the third place—and perhaps this was the most important argument of all—that, in this country, the administration of justice is carried on under so many difficulties, and is so frequently abused to purposes of the worst kind that it is of the greatest importance that the character of witnesses should be open to full inquiry. These reasons satisfied the committee, and myself amongst the rest that the sections proposed would be inexpedient, and others have accordingly been substituted for them which I think will in practice be found sufficient. Vide the Speech of Sir James Fitzjames Stephen in the Council. Accordingly the new sections 149 to 152 were substituted for the old ones. As regards these sections he said, 'The object of these sections is to lay down in the most distinct manner, the duty of Counsel of all grades in examining witnesses with a view to shaking their credit by damaging their character. I trust that this explicit statement of the principle according to which such questions ought or ought not to be asked, will be found sufficient to prevent the growth, in this country, of that which in England has on many occasions been a grave scandal. I think the sections as far as their substance is concerned speak for themselves and that they will be admitted to be sound by all honourable advocates and by the public. I cannot leave the subject without a few remarks on the memorials which the sections originally proposed have called forth from the Bar in various parts of the country. As none of the bodies in question have made any further remarks on the Bill since it appeared in the Gazette in its amended form about a month ago I suppose that alterations made in the Bill have removed the main objections made to it. I need not therefore notice those parts of their memorials which were directed against the consequences which they apprehended from the sections which have been given up' Ibid

During the examination of the defendant by plaintiff a question was put whether she was made pregnant by a certain person. The question was objected to but the plaintiff contended that it was relevant, his case being that the witness did not inherit the property by reason of her unchastity during the life time of her husband. If the plaintiff's case was that she did not inherit the property of her husband by reason of her unchastity during his life time, then the question would be relevant. It however, it was asked for impeaching her credit as a witness, the Court will have to consider the provisions of s 146 and s 148 to 152 of the Evidence Act. Subala Das v. Indra Kumar, 1923 Cal 315, see also Panda v. Abdul, 65 Ind Cas 693—5 N L J 138.

Indecent and scandalous questions may be put either to shake the credit of a witness or as relating to facts in issue or to determine whether or not a fact in issue existed. If they are put merely to shake the credit of a witness the Court has complete dominion over them and may forbid such questions even though they may have some bearing on the question before the Court. But if they relate to facts in issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed the Court has no jurisdiction to forbid such questions though they may be indecent or scandalous. Advocates have ample discretion in the conduct of cases of which they are in charge and the Court cannot better their discretion by insisting that their client should be put to this witness or that. Mahomed v. Emperor, 52 Ind Cas 51—20 Cr L J 466. When a question in cross-examination reflects not on the witness but on the third party, s 150 of the Evidence Act, which must be referred back to s 146 can have no application. Pearry Mohan v. Donald Watson 9 Ind Cas 509. There is nothing in the provisions of the Evidence Act to prevent the prosecution of a person for defamation, if he puts defamatory questions, not in good faith, but knowing that the imputation they convey is false and with the sole object of defaming the person questioned although such question may be relevant as shaking the credit of the witness 2 Weir 819

S 153

153 When a witness has been asked and has answered any question which is relevant to the inquiry only in so far as it tends to shake his credit by injuring his character, no evidence shall be given to contradict him, but, if he answers falsely, he may afterwards be charged with giving false evidence

Exception 1—If a witness is asked whether he has been previously convicted of any crime and denies it, evidence may be given of his previous conviction

Exception 2—If a witness is asked any question tending to impeach his impartiality and answers it by denying the facts suggested, he may be contradicted

Illustrations

(a) A claim against an underwriter is resisted on the ground of fraud. The claimant is asked whether, in a former transaction, he had not made a fraudulent claim. He denies it. Evidence is offered to show that he did make such a claim.

The evidence is inadmissible.

(b) A witness is asked whether he was not dismissed from a situation for dishonesty. He denies it.

Evidence is offered to show that he was dismissed for dishonesty.

The evidence is not admissible.

(c) A affirms that on a certain day he saw B at Lahore.

A is asked whether he himself was not on that day at Calcutta. He denies it.

Evidence is offered to show that A was on that day at Calcutta.

The evidence is admissible, not as contradicting A on a fact which affects his credit, but as contradicting the alleged fact that B was seen on the day in question in Lahore.

In each of these cases the witness might, if his denial was false, be charged with giving false evidence.

(d) A is asked whether his family has not had a blood feud with the family of B against whom he gives evidence.

He denies it. He may be contradicted on the ground that the question tends to impeach his impartiality.

Principle It is obvious that questions asked merely to discredit a witness, introduce matter altogether foreign to the enquiry, and that if controversy about the matter so introduced were allowed the Court would be occupied with deciding, not the merits of the case but the merits of the witness, and thus any suit might be indefinitely protracted. Cum Ex p 66. In Attorney General v Hutch Coc 1 Exch 194 Alderson B said: "When the question is not relevant, strictly speaking to the issue, but tending to contradict the witness, his answer must be taken (although it tends to show that he in that particular instance speaks falsely and although it is (thus) not altogether material to the issue) for the sake of the general public convenience, for great inconvenience would follow from a continual course of those sorts of cross-examinations which would be let in in the case of a witness being called for the purpose of contradiction. In that case Rolf B said: 'The laws of evidence on this subject as to what ought or what ought not to be received, must be considered as founded on sort of comparative consideration of the time to be occupied in examinations of this nature and the time which it is practicable to bestow upon them. If we lived for a thousand years instead of about sixty or seventy, and every case were of sufficient importance, it might be possible and perhaps proper to throw a light on matters in which every possible question might be suggested, for the purpose of seeing by such means whether the whole was unfounded, or what portion of it was not, and to raise every possible enquiry as to the truth of the statements made. But I do not see how that could be, in fact, mankind find it to be impossible. Therefore some line must be drawn." "Any other rule would tend to divert the attention of the jury from the real enquiry before them, whether the witness was entitled to credit in the evidence he had given, to the enquiry whether he had told the truth upon some collateral question and the danger is encountered that, upon this collateral issue raised on the trial, evidence may become proper and so be let in, which would be illegal upon the trial of the issue between the real parties to the cause and such illegal testimony may make an improper impression upon the minds of the jury not with standing any instruction of the Court as to the proper bearing thereof." Higmore § 1062. It is therefore, provided that whenever a witness has answered a question asked merely for the purpose of discrediting him no evidence shall be given in the case to contradict his answer the only remedy if he answers falsely, is to prosecute him afterwards for giving false evidence. In this rule, however there are two exceptions, allowed perhaps because they are matters which admit of clear and easy proof. If a witness is asked whether he has been previously convicted and denies it, the previous conviction may be proved and if he is asked about and denies any fact tending to impeach his impartiality, as, are you not the plaintiff's brother? Or have you not received a bribe from the defendant? the fact impeaching his impartiality may be proved. Cun Eo 67. This general rule excluding evidence to contradict a witness on matters not relevant to the issue, as well as the exceptions to it, are based on these considerations that a witness cannot justly be expected to come into Court prepared with evidence as to every act and incident of his life (which would be necessary if evidence could be given against him thereon) and that it would indefinitely prolong the trial to allow evidence to be given on both sides as to such collateral matters, but that on the other hand a witness ought to come prepared to prove the purity and integrity of his motives in coming to give evidence and that he is never been convicted. All Gen v Hitchcock, 1 Ex 91, Wills Ex 2nd Ed 326.

S 153

Scope of the section. Where a fact which has a direct bearing on the issue is denied by a witness, it may of course, be proved alimunde. See illustration (c) but where the fact inquired after is collateral to the issue,—as, for instance the character of a witness—counsel must be content with the answer which the witness chooses to give him. If he denies the imputation, the answer is conclusive for the purposes of the suit, see illustrations (a) & (b). The matter cannot be carried further at the trial except in the two cases provided by this section. The only redress which a party has, is to charge the witness with perjury and try him for it. To this rule there are however two exceptions. Not Ex p 332. So the right to cross examine to credit is subject to this rule, that with two exceptions the answers of the witness as to matters not relevant to the issue are conclusive in this sense that they cannot be contradicted by evidence in chief on the other side. Baker v Baker, 32 L J P D & A 145. However untrue they may be, they cannot be treated as if their truth or falsity were an issue in the cause. Wills Ex 2nd Ed 325. The rejection of the contradictory testimony may indeed some times exclude the truth, but this evil, acknowledged though it be, is as nothing compared with the inconvenience that must arise were a contrary rule to prevail. All Gen v Hitchcock 1 Ex R 93, 94, 103 104. The case of Alcock v The Royal Exchange Insurance Company, 13 B 292, forms no real exception to the above rule. There an action was brought by a ship owner against under writers on a policy of insurance and the plaintiff's claim to recover as for a total loss rested on the abandonment of the vessel by the captain. The captain was called as a witness by the plaintiff, and, on cross-examination denied that previous to the voyage insured against he had been an habitual drunkard. The defendants thereupon called witnesses to establish that fact, and the Court held that their evidence was clearly admissible, as tending to show that the captain was not likely to have exercised a good judgment in reference to the abandonment, and that consequently the judgment actually exercised by him was not entitled to any respect from the jury Taylor § 1439 Sections 153 and 155 of the Evidence Act must be strictly construed and narrowly interpreted if the cases governed by the Act are to be spared the risk in many suits of prosecuting on most perfect material issues, which have no bearing upon that really in contest between the parties Bhogilal v Royal Insurance Co, 6 Rang 142=26 A L J 377=32 C W N 593=108 Ind, Cas 1=47 C L J 550=30 Bom L R 818 (P C) This section does not go far beyond, if it goes at all, the case of Att Gen v Hutcheon, 1 Ex. 91, on which it is based.

Evidence to contradict relevant facts Where witnesses have been examined by the prosecution to state that they saw the accused at a particular place at a particular time, held that evidence of other witnesses could be let in to prove that the former witnesses could not have seen the accused as stated by them. Such evidence is admissible under ss 5, 11, 153 of the Evidence Act. It is not to impeach the credit of witnesses that such evidence is let in, but to contradict evidence as to relevant facts Reg v Saktharam 11 B H C 166 Where on the denial by the complainant in a prosecution for forgery of ever having executed a pro-note, evidence that he has executed a pro note similar to the one in question in the charge or even that a judgment had been obtained on another note is inadmissible under s 43 or s 153 of the Evidence Act Reg v Prabhudas, 11 B H C 90 "It is frequently a nice question whether a particular matter is one upon which a witness may be contradicted by other witnesses. The reason of the rule which restricts the right to do so is, that it is an object of great importance to confine the attention of the jury as much as possible to the specific issues. Without some rule, many collateral questions of fact might be raised in the course of a long trial, and the specific questions to be determined be lost sight of. At the same time it is desirable that any evidence should be admitted which may assist in determining the respective value of conflicting testimony. And where the trial is by a Judge and not by a jury, there is probably less reason for the rule. We think the rule is well stated in Greenleaf on Evidence section 52, as excluding all evidence of facts which are incapable of affording any reasonable presumption or inference as to the principal fact or matter in dispute. According to Pollock, C B, the test is whether the matter is one which the party proposing to contradict would have been able himself to prove in evidence. Attorney General v Hutcheon, 1 Exch 91, 99" Per Couch C J in Kazi Gulam v H H Aga Khan, 6 B H C O C J 93(96)

Exception I At the common law a witness might be cross-examined as to whether he had been convicted of any felony or misdemeanour, but if he denied it he could not be contradicted, unless the commission of the offence was relevant to the issue. This state of law was altered as to civil cases by section 25 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict C 125), and afterwards as to both civil and criminal cases by the statute 28 Vict C 18, of which section 6, enacts as follows—"A witness may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any felony or misdemeanour, and, upon being so questioned, if he either denies or does not admit the fact or refuses to answer, it shall be lawful for the cross-examining party to prove such conviction, and a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for such offence, purporting to be signed by the clerk of the Court or other officer having the custody of the records of the Court where the offender was convicted or by the Deputy of such clerk or officer (for which certificate a fee of five shillings and no more shall be demanded or taken) shall, upon proof of the identity of the person, be sufficient evidence of the said conviction without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same." Although a witness's conviction for a felony or misdemeanour is not considered necessary relevant to the issue, yet the effect of the statute is now to admit evidence of the conviction in all cases where it is admissible to cross-examine the witness to his credit with regard to it. Wood v Simfield, 49 L J C P 696, Wills Ev,

S 153

2nd Ed 341 Similarly in R v Watson, 2 Stark 149, Lord Ellenborough observed "For the purpose of ascertaining the credit due to witnesses, the Courts indulge free cross examination, but when a crime is imputed to a witness, of which he may be convicted by due course of law, the Court knows of but one medium of proof, the record of conviction." In the above named case, it was argued for the defendant "that a man might be able to prove that a witness was not to be believed upon oath, by showing that he had been guilty of a number of criminal acts, although he could not produce a single record of conviction, that since it might be proved indirectly that the witness is not credible upon oath, it was too strong a proposition to say that the same conclusion might not be proved directly by actual proof of accumulated crimes which demonstrated the infamy of the witness that the consequences would be enormous and alarming to the administration of justice, if such evidence were to be shut out, a witness who had committed a multitude of crimes, but who had not been convicted of one, would stand as a fair and credible witness in a Court of justice." But Lord Ellenborough, L C J said "This is no clear point and so entirely without a precedent that it would be a waste of time to call for a reply. The Court does not sit for the purpose of examining into collateral crimes. It would be unjust to permit it for it would be impossible that the party should be ready to exculpate himself by bringing forward evidence in answer to the charge, there would be no possibility of a fair and competent trial upon the subject and therefore it is never done." In the same case Bayley J said "If this evidence were admissible, it would be impossible to proceed in the administration of justice, because on every trial the Court would have to try one hundred different issues, and juries, instead of having one issue to try, would have their attention withdrawn from one single point to look into an indefinite number of crimes. The rule is that a party against whom a witness is called may examine witnesses as to his general character, but he is not allowed to prove particular facts in order to discredit him, for although every man may be supposed to be capable of defending his general character, he cannot come prepared to defend himself against particular charges without notice. If the witness were apprised of the charges he might come prepared with evidence to show that, although there was prima facie evidence against him, they were in reality unfounded."

Similarly in All Gen v Hutchcock 1 Exch 103 Alderson B said "Perhaps it ought to be received, but for the inconvenience that would arise from the witnesses being called upon to answer particular acts of his life which he might have been able to explain if he had reasonable notice to do so and to have shown that all the acts of his life had been perfectly correct and pure although other witnesses were called to prove the contrary. The reason why the party is obliged to take the answer of a witness is that if he were permitted to go into it, it is only justice to allow the witness to call other evidence in support of the testimony he has given, and as those witnesses might be cross examined as to their conduct, such a course would be productive of endless collateral issues. Suppose for instance witness A is accused of having committed some offence, witness B is called to prove it, when on B's cross-examination he is asked whether he has not made some statement, to prove which witness C is called, so that it would be necessary to try all those issues before one step could be obtained towards the adjudication of the particular case before the Court. On the contrary, if the answer be taken as given, if the witness speaks falsely he may be indicted for perjury." So this kind of evidence is excluded on the ground of auxiliary policy: (1) the reason of confusion of issues and (2) the reason of unfair surprise. Wigmore § 979

But when the extrinsic testimony is in the shape of a record of a judgment of conviction for crime, both the above reasons cease to operate (a) there is no risk of confusion of issues, first because the number of acts of misconduct provable in this way is practically small and next, because the judgment cannot be reopened and no new issues (other than the occasional ones occurring in the process of authentication of the record) are raised thereby, (2) there is no danger of unfair surprise—not, however, because (as it sometimes said) the witness well knows whether he was ever convicted, this assumes the very thing in the controversy, namely, that he is guilty, but because the judgment is conclusive and cannot be attacked, and therefore the witness could not use his supporting witnesses to prove his innocence, even if he had them in Court. It has therefore been universally acknowledged that proof of a crime by record of a judgment of conviction may be made, not because an exception is carved out of the rule, but because the reason of the rule does not apply. Wigmore § 980

A finger print expert was called as a witness who compared certain finger prints of the accused taken in Court with some other finger prints on a paper which contained a record of certain convictions which purported to be the convictions of the accused and pronounced them to be similar. Held that the previous convictions were not properly proved. Randall v King Emperor 21 C W N 469=39 Ind Cas 302

Whether subsequent pardon affects the admissibility of such evidence. A pardon does not remove the admissibility of the original judgment for the purposes of impeachment, for (unless otherwise expressly declared therein) a pardon does not imply a finding of innocence of the person convicted. Mr Wilmington in arguing in Crosby v Trust, 12 How St Tr 1296 said "Though the offence was taken away by the pardon yet the credit of the party must be diminished thereby, and no pardon nor oblivion can so far take away consequences of a crime (though it may pardon the punishment) as to make a man a new creature, as long as the old lump and the presumption of the old malicious spirit still remains." "A pardon is not presumed to be granted on the ground of innocence or total reformation. It removes the disability but does not change the common law principle that the conviction of an infamous offence is evidence of bad character for truth. The general character of a person for truth, bad enough to destroy his competency as a witness, must be bad enough to affect his credibility when his competency is restored by the executive or legislative branch of the Government." Per Doe J in Curtis v Cochran, 50 N H 242, Wigmore § 980

Exception 2 This exception refers to matters which are easily susceptible of proof and strikes at the very root of the witness's trustworthiness. Cun Ev 333. Whether this can be done was the subject of much doubt in England. The legislature has taken the view of the matter as laid down in Att Gen v Hitchcock, 1 Exch 91 (99). In that case Pollock CB said "My view has always been that the test whether the matter is collateral or not is this. If the answer of witness is a matter which you would be allowed on your part to prove in evidence, if it have such a connection with the issue that you would be allowed to give in evidence then it is a matter on which you may contradict him. I think the expression 'as to any matters connected with the subject of inquiry' is far too vague and loose to be the foundation of any judicial decision. And I may say I am not at all prepared to adopt the proposition in those general terms that a witness may be contradicted as to anything he denies having said, provided it be in any way connected with the subject before the jury. It must be connected with the issue as a matter capable of being distinctly given in evidence, or it must be so far connected with it as to be a matter which, if answered in a particular way would contradict a part of the witness's testimony, and if it is neither the one nor the other of these it is collateral to though in some sense it may be considered as connected with the subject of the inquiry. A distinction should be observed between those matters which may be given in evidence by way of contradiction as directly affecting the story of the witness touching the issue before the jury and those matters which affect the motives, temper and character of the witness, not with respect to his credit, but with reference to his feelings towards one party or the other. It is certainly allowable to ask a witness in what manner he stands affected towards the opposite party in the cause and whether he does not stand in such a relation to that person as is likely to affect him and prevent him from having an unprejudiced state of mind, and whether he has not used expressions importing that he would be revenged on some one or that he would give such evidence as might dispose of the cause in one way or the other. If he denies that, you may give evidence as to what he said—not with the view of having a direct effect on the issue, but to show what is the state of mind of that witness in order that the jury may exercise their opinion as to how far he is to be believed. But those cases, where you may show the condition of a witness or his connection with either of the parties, are not to be confounded with other cases where it is proposed to contradict a witness on some matter unconnected with the question at issue." In the same case Alderson B said "The question is this, can you ask a witness as to what he is supposed to have said on a previous occasion? You may ask him of any fact material to the issue, and if he denies it you may prove that fact, as you are at liberty to prove any fact material to the issue. The witness may also be asked as to his state of equal mind or impartiality between the two contending parties,—questions which could have a tendency to show that the whole of his statement is to be taken with a qualification and that such a statement ought really to be laid out of the case for want of impartiality, [and these answers may be contradicted]. Such, again, is the case of an offer of a bribe by a witness to another person, or the offer of a bribe accepted by a witness from another person, the circumstance of a witness having offered or accepted a bribe shows that he is not equal and impartial. But with these exceptions I am not aware that you can with propriety permit a witness to be examined first and contradicted afterwards on a point which is merely and purely collateral." Wigmore § 1020

S 153

Bias, corruption, etc. Particular circumstances and expressions indicating bias are provable by extrinsic testimony; they are therefore also provable in contradiction. R v Burke, 8 Cox Cr C 49, Wigmore § 1005. In Thomas v David, 7 C & P 350, Coleridge J said "If the question had been whether the witness had walked the streets as a common prostitute I think that that it would have been collateral to the issue, and that had the witness denied such a charge she would not have been contradicted. But here, the question is whether the witness had contracted such a relation with the plaintiff as might induce her thus more readily to conspire with him to support a forgery just in the same way as if she had been asked if she was the sister or daughter of the plaintiff and had denied that."

A party may call evidence to show that a witness on the other side has given his evidence in this particular case from some corrupt or indirect motive, as bribery, malice or revenge, or has given it under the influence of some bias in favour of or against, one of the parties whereby suspicion is cast on the honesty of his evidence. Thus it has been decided that evidence may be called to prove that a witness has accepted a bribe, or has offered to bribe others to give evidence (Lord Stafford's Case 7 How St Tr 1400) but not that he has been offered a bribe as this is of no importance if the bribe was not accepted, in the words of Pollock C B "It is no disparagement to a man that a bribe is offered to him, it may be a disparagement to the person who makes this offer" (1st Gent v Hitchcock 1 Ex 91 103). But a mere attempt by a witness to dissuade another from giving evidence on the other side does not come within the rule Harris v Tippet 2 Camp 637, Wills Et 2nd Ed p 337.

The distinction made between cases coming within the section and those within Exception 2 is exemplified in Yewin's case R v Yewin, 2 Camp 638 n. "One Yewin was indicted for stealing whet. The principal witness against him was a boy of the name of Thomas his apprentice. Lawrence J allowed the prisoner's Counsel to ask Thomas in cross examination whether he had not been charged with robbing his master, and whether he had not afterwards said he would be revenged on him and would soon fire him in Monmouth goal? He denied both. The prisoner's Counsel then proposed to prove, that he had been charged with robbing his master and had spoken the words imputed to him. Lawrence J ruled that his answer must be taken as to the former but that, as the words were material to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner evidence might be adduced that they were spoken by the witness. Note to Harris v Tippet 2 Camp 638, Cun Ev 384, Wills Et 2nd Ed 388.

It is allowable to ask a witness in what manner he stands affected towards the opposite party in the cause and whether he does not stand in such a relation to that person as is likely to affect him, and prevent him from having an unprejudiced mind and whether he has not used expressions imputing that he would be revenged on some one, or that he could give such evidence as might dispose of the cause in one way or the other, and if he denies it, evidence may be given as to what he said, not with the view of having a direct effect but to show what is the state of mind of that witness in order that the jury may exercise their opinion as to how far he is to be believed. All Gen v Hitchcock, 1 Ex 93. In an action on a promissory note (in which the defence appears to have been that the note was forged), the female servant of the plaintiff who was one of the attesting witnesses to the note, was asked on cross examination whether she did not constantly sleep in the same bed with the plaintiff which she denied. Cotteridge J held that a witness might be called by the defendant to contradict her, as the question was whether the witness had contracted such a relation with the plaintiff as might induce her the more readily to conspire with the plaintiff to support a forgery, just in the same way as if she had been asked if she was the sister or daughter of the plaintiff and had denied that. But if the question had been whether the witness had denied that the witness had walked the streets as a common prostitute, that would have been a collateral issue, and if she had denied it she could not have been contradicted. Thomas v David, 7 C & P 550, Melluish v Collier 15 Q B 8-3, Russ Cr 2319.

154 The Court may, in its discretion, permit the person who calls a witness to put any questions to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party

Question by party
to his own witness

Principle The examination of an adverse party some times becomes necessary in which case, it need not be confined to the limits of the ordinary direct examination. As such a witness will not be disposed to state anything favourable to his opponent, if he can help it it is allowable to elicit the facts desired by the use of leading questions. In fact the examination under the circumstances partakes of the character of a cross-examination. The relaxation of the rule is usually carried to the extent of allowing such questions in any case where the witness appears to be generally hostile, whether or not a necessary witness and whether or not he was known to be hostile when called. A witness who on the stand gives his testimony in a manner at variance with his statement of the facts made before trial to the party calling him becomes a hostile witness, and though not a necessary witness, if the party was justified in calling him, and has done so in good faith, he will not be bound to adhere to the ordinary rules of direct examination. And even in the examination of a friendly witness, where he seems to have forgotten some material point it may be suggested to his mind in the form of a leading question. Melchey's Ex § 250.

Scope of the section A party is not bound to accept the testimony of his own witness as correct. It is very clear that a party producing a witness may prove the truth of material facts by any other competent evidence, even though the effect of such testimony is to directly contradict his own witness, "and this, not only when it appears that the witness was innocently mistaken, but even where the evidence may collaterally have the effect of showing that he was generally unworthy of belief." Green's Ex § 443. This is now recognized as the settled law, without reference to whether the party is taken by surprise or not. "A party is not obliged to receive as unimpeachable truth everything which a witness previously called by him may swear to. If the witness has been false or mistaken in his testimony, he (the party calling him) may prove the truth by others." This common sense rule allows a party whose witness may have answered many questions satisfactorily, and some unatisfactorily to bring other evidence better to prove the latter. There is no impeachment in such a case. It is merely that other evidence is brought for being used upon those particular points. It happens frequently that two witnesses to the same accident will give similar evidence as to date, time and place of the occurrence and yet differ entirely as to the mode in which it occurred. A party is not bound by all the statements of a witness called by him if adverse, even though no other witnesses are called to contradict him, the party may rely on part of such testimony, although in other parts the witness denies the facts sought to be proved. It has been well said that, if the other rules should prevail, "every one would be at the mercy of his own witness, and if the first witness sworn should swear against him he would lose the testimony of all the rest. This would be a perversion of justice." Small v. Gregory, 37 Mich 500. The right to contradict the party's own witness does not extend to every fact testified to by the witness but is limited to those which are material to the issue. The mistaken or false answer of a witness respecting a fact material to be shown at the trial of a cause may always be contradicted by other proof and which may be offered by either party, but it is otherwise as to statements by the witness of matters merely collateral. As to these the party calling the witness and making the enquiry is bound. Burr Jones § 857.

S 154

But the rule as regards a witness called by a party, who turns hostile is quite different. With the permission of the Court he can be cross-examined. Leading questions can be put to him and he can be impeached like witness called by the adversary. This discretion of the Judge under this section is absolute and not subject to review by the Appellate Court. Rice v. Howard, 16 B D Q 681, Puce v. Manning, 42 Ch D 373.

English law as regards hostile witness. It was an established rule of common law that a party should not be allowed to give general evidence to discredit his own witness, i.e., general evidence that he is unworthy of belief on his oath. By calling a witness a party represents him to the Court as worthy of credit or at least not so infamous as to be wholly unworthy of it, and if he afterwards attacks his general character for veracity, this is not only malafides towards the tribunal, but, say the books, it "would enable this party to destroy the witness if he spoke against him, and to make him a good witness if he spoke for him with the means in his hand of destroying his credit if he spoke against him." B N P 297, 2 Phill Ev 525 10th Ed, Best Ev § 645. A party might however, discredit his own witness collaterally by adducing evidence to show that the evidence which he gave was untrue in fact. 2 Phill Ev 10th Ed 526. This does not raise the slightest presumption of malafides, and it would be in the highest degree unjust and absurd if parties were bound by the unfavourable statements of witnesses with whom they may have no privity, and who are frequently called by them from pure necessity. But whether it was competent for a party to show that his own witness had made statements out of Court inconsistent with the evidence which he had given in it was an unsettled point, on which however the weight of authority was in favour of the negative. Taylor 1st Ed § 1049. 2 Phill Ev 528. Melhuish v. Collier 15 Q. B 878. On the one hand it was urged that this falls within the principle of the general rule, that a party must not be allowed directly to discredit his own witness. Ph & Im Ev 904. that to admit proof of contradictory statements would tend to multiply issues that it would enable a party to get the naked statement of a witness before the jury operating in fact as substantive evidence (Taylor Ev § 1048 1st Ed) that there would be some danger of collusion and dishonest contrivance in as much as a witness might be induced to make a statement out of Court, for the purpose of its being reserved and afterwards used to contradict him, and that the jury might regard such a statement as substantive evidence in the cause. Moreover the use of oaths and other sanctions of truth is to extract facts which parties might be willing to conceal, and the allowing a witness to be thus contradicted holds out an inducement to him to maintain by perjury in Court any false and hasty statements he may have made out of it. Best Ev § 616. The following reasoning was put forward on this other side. "It may be argued the evidence is not open to the objection that the party would thus discredit his own witness by general testimony that although a party who calls a person of bad character as witness, knowing him to be such ought not to be allowed to defeat his testimony because it turns out unfavourable to him by direct proof of general bad character yet it is only just that he should be permitted to show if he can, that the evidence has taken him by surprise, and is contrary to the examination of the witness, preparatory to the trial, that this course is necessary, as a security against the contrivance of an artful witness who otherwise might recommend himself to an opposite party by the promise of favourable evidence (being really in the interest of the party), and afterwards by hostile evidence ruin his cause, that the rule with the above exception as to offering contradictory evidence ought to be the same, whether the witness is called by the one party or the other, and that the danger of the jury's treating the contradictory matter as substantive testimony is the same in both cases, that, as to the supposed danger of collusion it is extremely improbable, and would be easily detected. It may be further remarked that this is a question in which not only the interests of the litigating parties are involved, but also the more important general interests of truth, in criminal as well as in civil proceedings, that the ends of justice are best attained by allowing a free and ample scope for scrutinising evidence and estimating its real value, and that in the administration of criminal justice more especially, the exclusion of the proof of contradictory statements might be attended with the worst consequences. Ph & Am Ev 905

In this state of the law the 17 & 18 Vict C 125, s 22, was passed,—which was originally applicable only to Civil Courts, but has since been extended (18 & 19 Vict C 18, ss 1-3) to all Courts of judicature as well criminal as all others, and to all persons having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive and examine evidence, and which enacts that "A party producing a witness shall not be allowed to impeach his credit by general evidence of bad character, but he may, in case the witness shall in the opinion of the Judge prove adverse, contradict him by other evidence, or, by the leave of the Judge, prove that he made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony, but before such last mentioned proof can be given, the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness and he must be asked whether or not he had made such statement." The term "adverse" in this section must be understood in the sense of the witness exhibiting a hostile mind towards the party calling him, and not merely in the sense that his testimony turns out to be unfavourable to that party. Greenough v Eccles, 5 C B N S 786, best Ev § 645

Adverse witness—meaning of In Dear v Knight, 1 F & F 433 Earle J appears to have regarded a witness 'adverse' simply because he made a statement contrary to what he was called to prove. See also Pound v Wilson 4 F & F 301 Taylor § 1426 In Greenough v Eccles, 5 C B N S 786—28 L J C P 160 Williams and Willes JJ interpreted "adverse" as hostile, in distinction from mere unfavourable. So the conditions for the use of the term are (1) that the Judge shall consider him hostile and (2) that the Judge shall also give leave, which he need not do even though the witness is hostile, Cockburn CJ not altogether assenting. In Coles v Coles L R 1 P & D 70, Sir J P Wilde said "An adverse witness is one who does not give in evidence what the party calling him wished him to give. A hostile witness is one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth to the Court. See also Luchman v Radhacharan, 49 C 93 In Cresswell v Jackson 4 F & F 3, Cockburn CJ construed 'adverse' as merely different and unfavourable. See also Pound v Wilson, 4 F & F 301 Faulner v Brune 1 F and F 251, Martin v Ins Co 1 F & F 500, Arustell v Alexander, 16 L T R N S 840 In Rice v Howard, L R 16 Q B D 681 Grove and Stephen JJ treated 'adverse' as equivalent to hostile. In Sunderia v Ranees Dass, 24 C W N 800 (1899), Mr Justice Mukerjee said "A witness is considered adverse when, in the opinion of the Judge, he bears a hostile animus to the party calling him and not merely when his testimony contradicts his proof, in other words, as Wilde J remarked in Coles v Coles, L R, 1 P & M 70, 71 a hostile witness is one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth, and secondly, as Lord Campbell CJ observed in Faulner v Brune 1 F & F 251, when a witness is treated as hostile and cross-examined by the party calling him this must be done to discredit the witness altogether and not merely to get rid of part of his testimony." A witness who is called by the other party is a hostile witness. Parmeshwar v Emperor, 31 Ind C 1926 Pat 316 see also Buzor v Emperor, 3 Pat L J 119-111 Ind.

- S 154. A hostile witness may be defined as one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence (within which is included the fact that he is willing to go back upon previous statements by him) shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth to the Court. Panchanon v Emperor, A L R, 1930 Cal. 276

Hostile witness—leading questions A party is not allowed to put leading questions to one's own witness because the rule prevents the supplying of suggestions of false testimony to a witness who is disposed to take advantage of them. He is assumed to be friendly to the party putting him on the stand, but this is only a provisional assumption, and, accordingly, if he turns out to be hostile to the party the prohibition ceases, and conversely if on cross-examination by the other party to whom he has been assumed to be hostile he turns out to be a friendly party the prohibition equally applies on cross-examination. Thus the test for the prohibition of leading questions is ultimately and essentially independent of the superficial circumstance whether originally one party or the other put him on the stand. Wigmore § 909 W. Williams, arguing in Connings-mans Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 1 (27) said: "There is a great deal of difference, I find, where you examine a man with the hour and where you examine him against the hour. Where you find it difficult to answer, you will pump him with questions and cross-interrogate him to sift out the truth." W. D. Evans to his Notes to Pothier said: "His unwillingness is commonly to be decided by the Judge, according to his impression of demeanour of the witness, upon the trial. The situation of the witness, and the inducements which he may have for withholding a fair account are also very proper circumstances to be taken into account in forming his decision. A son will not be very forward in stating the misconduct of his father of which he has been the only witness, a servant will not, in an action against his master, be very ready to acknowledge the negligence committed by himself."

In State v Banner, 64 Mo. 779 Appleton C. J., said: "If the witness is from any cause adverse to the party calling him, the same reason which authorizes and sanctions cross examination more or less rigorous, equally requires it when the party finds that the witness whom the necessities of his case have compelled him to call is adverse in feeling is reluctant to disclose what he knows, is evasive or false. Important as interrogation may be if the witness is friendly, to remove uncertainty and indistinctness and to give fullness and clearness doubly important is it, if the witness be dishonest and adverse to extract from reluctant lips facts concealed from sympathy secreted from interest, or withheld from dishonesty. Cross examination may be as necessary to elicit the truth from one's own as from one's opponent's witness. So leading questions are allowable in case of witnesses who are hostile biased or interested by their sympathies with the opponent's cause. Clark v Saffery Ry & Moo 126, R v Chapman 8 C & P 559 R v Bull, 8 C & P 745 Ohlson v Terreno L. R. 10 Ch. 129, see also Alexander v Gibson 2 Campb. 556, Bradly v Ricardo 8 Bing. 57, Friendlauder London Assurance Co, 4 B & Ad. 193. This rule is applicable in cases of witnesses unwilling for any other reason to tell all they may know. Parlin v Moon 7 C & P 409 R v Murphy 8 C & P 306, Wigmore § 774 R v Ball 8 C & P 745. Putting leading questions to one's own witness with the permission of the Court under ss 154 and 143 of the Evidence Act does not amount to declaring the witness as hostile and cross-examining him so as to preclude the party who has called him from relying upon the evidence of that witness. Per Cunningham J in Bikram Ali v Emperor Ind. Rul. (1380) Cal. 396. But Lord Williams J in the same case said: "I desire to add that in my opinion ss 143 and 154 of the Evidence Act read together do not give power to the prosecution to put leading questions to their own witnesses even with the assent of the Judge. The meaning of s 154 is that they may, with the permission of the Court treat a witness as hostile and cross-examine him. The wording of s 154 shows that the Legislature did not intend to distinguish the law in this country from the law which obtains in England."

Impeaching one's own witness In Adams v Arnold 12 Mod. 375, the Court did not allow a party to impeach his own witness. See also Rice v Outfield

2 Stra. 1095, see Fitzbarris' Trial, 8 How St Tr 223, 369 373, Phonetic's Trial, 8 How St Tr 447, 496, College's Trial 8 How St Tr 549, Warren Hastings' Trial, Lord's Journal, Feb 9, April 10 31 Parl Hist 369. There are several reasons assigned in favour of this prohibition. The first reason is that a party is bound by his own witnesses' statement. This objection is thus answered by Lord Ellenborough L C J in Alexander v Gibson 2 Camp 555 "If a witness is called on the part of the plaintiff who swears what is palpably false, it would be extremely hard if the plaintiff's case should for that reason be sacrificed, but I know of no rule of law by which the truth is on such an occasion to be shut out and justice is to be perverted." Similarly in Bradley v Ricardo 8 Bing 53, Tindal C J said "The object of all the laws of evidence is to bring the whole truth of a case before the jury (but if this contradicting evidence were excluded) that would no longer be just ground on which the principles of evidence would proceed, but we should compel the plaintiff to take singly all the chances of the tables and to be bound by the statements of a witness whom he might call without knowing he was adverse, who might labour under a defect of memory, or be otherwise unable to make a statement on which complete reliance might be placed." Wigmore § 897.

The second reason for not allowing a party to impeach the testimony of his own witness is thus stated by Prof Greenleaf "When a party offers a witness in proof of his cause he thereby, in general, represents him as worthy of belief he is presumed to know the character of the witnesses he adduces, and having thus presented them to the Court, the law will not permit the party afterwards to impeach their general reputation for truth." Greenleaf Ev § 442. Due answer to this argument would be that the supposed guarantee ought not in fairness to be allowed to burden a party when he has discovered the witness's untrustworthiness after putting him on the stand. Another and more satisfactory answer would be that the ends of truth are not to be subserved by binding the parties with guarantees and vouchings, and that it is the business of a Court of Justice, in mere self respect, to seek all sources of correct information, whatever foolish guarantees a party may or may not have chosen to make. Wigmore § 898. Moreover in point of fact looking at the actual conduct of trials, neither party does know, and much less does he guarantee, the character and trustworthiness of the witness called by him. Chief Justice May, in 11 American Law Review, at p 264 wrote "But does common experience show that, from the given fact that a witness is brought into Court by a party, it is to be inferred that he not only knows his character but also that character is such that in general he is worthy of belief? Witnesses are not made to order—at least not by honest people. The only witnesses who can properly be called are those who happen to have knowledge of relevant facts, and who there may be is pre determined by the history and course of the events which are to come under examination. I be witnesses to the material facts in dispute are such persons as happen to have been cognizant of the facts and are not such as the parties have selected at their pleasure. In point of fact, it is substantially true that parties call particular persons as witnesses simply because they are obliged to and can call no others. If a lawsuit was a manufacture and the party bringing it could select his materials—facts and witnesses—, there might be some propriety in holding him responsible for the character of these materials, but as both are beyond his control, his responsibility for their character is out of the question. He come into the Court with the best materials he can get to make out his case." Wigmore § 898, see also Mellish v Collier, 19 L J Q B 493. So the Indian Legislature wisely departed from the rule of English law and under this section a person who calls a witness, may with the permission of the Court ask him questions to show his general bad character. Cun Ev 384.

Prior self contradiction—Party's own witness. Prior self contradiction neutralizes the statement on the stand, by showing that the witness can not be correct in both statements and is as likely to be wrong in the latter as in the former, and further more, that his certain error in this one respect indicates a possibility of error upon other points. But what is not to be necessarily implied from this error is any reflection upon the witness.

S 154 character, nor indeed upon any specific testimonial quality. The implication is merely that in some respect his testimonial capacity is capable of error,—perhaps in his observation, perhaps in his memory, perhaps through bias or corruption perhaps through a dishonest disposition, but not definitely in any one of these qualities. So the principle of the rule forbidding the impeachment of one's own witness does not extend its prohibition to this sort of evidence. The policy of protecting the witness, subjectively, against the fear of being abused and held up to disgrace in case he should disappoint the expectations of the party calling him obviously can not regard the exposure of a self-contradiction as a legitimate reason for such apprehension on the part of the witness. Wigmore § 902, see also Parmeshwar v Emperor 94 Ind Cas 700 = A I R 1926 Pat 316,

Calling the other party as a witness. If there is any situation in which semblance of reason disappears for the application of the rule against impeaching one's own witness, it is when the opposing party is himself called by the first party, and is sought to be compelled to disclose under oath that truth which he knows but is naturally unwilling to make known. To say that the first party guarantees the opponent's credibility is to mock him with a false formula; he hopes that the opponent will speak truly, but he equally perceives the possibilities of the contrary, and he no more guarantees the other's credibility than he guarantees the truth of the other's case and the falsity of his own. Wigmore § 916. But it is not only illegal but improper and unfair for Courts to permit the defendant at the very outset of the case, to be put in the witness box nominally as plaintiff's witness to be cross examined in the presence and hearing of the plaintiff, before the plaintiff is even called upon to go into the box and tell his own story. Max Mink v Shankar Das 16 P W R 1908. But in cases where a plaintiff was compelled to call a defendant he should be allowed to cross examine him. Any refusal on the part of Court to allow such cross examination would cause miscarriage of justice. Radhajeetun v Taramonee 12 M I A 380 (393). This case was explained and distinguished by Mookerjee J in Luchiram v Radhacharan, 34 C L J 107. His Lordship observed: "In support of this position he placed reliance upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Radhajeetun v Taramonee, 12 M I A 380 = 2 B L R 79 P C = 11 W R P C 31. That decision is of no assistance to the appellant. There the witnesses summoned for the plaintiff (except one) did not appear. The plaintiff thereupon filed a petition praying that the case might be decided by his summoning the defendant in person and taking his deposition. The defendant was accordingly summoned and was asked by the Court whether the money claimed by the plaintiff was justly due from him or not. The defendant answered that he was not liable for the claim. The plaintiff then submitted that he had not intended to abide by the answer of the defendant and asked leave to cross examine him. The trial Judge refused to put any further questions to the defendant or to allow any to be put on behalf of the plaintiff and dismissed the suit. On appeal to this Court Morgan and Pandit JJ expressed their disapproval of the course adopted by the trial Judge, and when the case went up to the Judicial Committee their Lordships fully concurred in the propriety of that censure. This is clearly no authority for the proposition that if the plaintiff calls the defendant as a witness, he is entitled to cross examine him as a matter of right in the case before the Judicial Committee the defendant was treated as a witness called by the Court. If the contention of the appellants were to prevail it would involve in substance an approval of the procedure condemned in emphatic terms by the Judicial Committee in two recent cases. In Kishori Lal v Chum Lal, 36 I A 9 = 31 A 116 = 13 C W N 370 = 9 C L J 122 Lord Allinson observed as follows: 'It would appear from the judgment of the High Court that in India it is one of the artifices of a weak and somewhat petty kind of advocacy for each litigant to cause his opponent to be summoned as a witness, with the design that each party shall be bound to produce the opponent so summoned as witness' and thus give the Counsel for each litigant the opportunity of cross examining his own client. It is a function which their Lordships cannot help thinking all judicial tribunals ought to set themselves to render as abortive as it is objectionable. It ought never to be permitted in the result to embarrass judicial investigation as it has done in this instance. Reference may also be made in this connection to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Lal Koer v Churanj Lal, L R 37 I A 1=32 A 104=14 C W N 235, see also Venkata v Palpana, 1913 M W N 838, In re Rangaswami Iyenger, 1913 M W N 993. The matter must plainly be decided under section 4 of the Indian Evidence Act which gives the Court a discretion to permit the person who calls a witness to put any question to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party. The rule recognized in Clarke v Saffery R & M 126 and Boston v Carew R & M 127, namely, that when the witness stands in a situation which naturally makes him defendant is the party who desires his testimony, as for example when a defendant is called as the plaintiff's witness, the party calling the witness is entitled to cross-examine him, cannot be held applicable in this country in view of the provisions of section 154 of the Indian Evidence Act. Indeed, even in England, it has been ruled in later cases that the situation in which a witness stands towards either party does not give the party calling the witness a right to cross-examine him, unless the witness's evidence be of such a nature as to make it appear that the witness is unwilling to tell the truth, Parfin v Moon, 7 C & P 408, R v Ball 8 C & P 745, and it now appears to be settled law in England that a party when called by his opponent cannot as of right be treated as hostile, the matter being solely in the discretion of the Court. Price v Manning, 42 Ch D 373. We must further remember that a witness has been defined as one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth to the Court. Coles v Coles, L R 1 P & D 70, Grenough v Eccles, 5 C B N S 758. Surendra v Ram Dass, 47 C 1043=32 C L J 34. See also Kommi uen v King Emperor, 92 Ind Cas 814.

Necessary witnesses. To prove a document one of the attesting witnesses must be called. This is specially necessary in the case of a Will (Vide s 68). Hence it is conceded that no rule prevents their impeachment by the proponent of the Will. Richardson v Allan 2 Stark 335, Bowman v Bowman 2 Mos & Rob 501. In Jackson v Thomasson, 1 B & S 745, 747, Cockburn C J said "I know of no authority that a party who claims under a Will, and consequently is compelled to call the attesting witnesses to it, cannot in the event of one of them disproving the Will give evidence to discredit him, as for instance by showing that he has been corrupted by the heir-at-law." See also Jones v Jones, 24 L R 839, Phillips v Davies, 1907, Times, Dec 13. But in Surendra v Ramee Dass 24 C W N 860=47 C 1043, Mr Justice Mookerjee said "We regret to observe that the examination in chief as also the cross-examination were conducted in a manner open to grave objection. Not only were the proceedings unduly prolonged, some times by an attempt to shake the credit of a witness by introduction of evidence to contradict him in violation of the provisions of section 153 of the Indian Evidence Act, but leading questions were put in examination in chief in contravention of other provisions of the law. It has been maintained before us that as the proponent was obliged under section 69 of the Indian Evidence Act to call the attesting witness to the Will, such witness should be treated as a witness called by the Court and liable to be cross-examined, as a matter of right, by the party citing him. In our opinion this contention cannot be upheld under section 154 of the Indian Evidence Act which provides that the Court may, in its discretion, permit the person who calls a witness to put any questions to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party. There is in this respect, no distinction on principle between an attesting witness whom a party is obliged to call and any other witness whom he may cite of his own choice, but the Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, be more easily persuaded in the former case than in the latter. In view of the provision of the Indian Evidence Act, it is thus plain that there is no room for the application, in this country, of the view taken in the case of Bowman v Bowman, 2 Mos & Rob 501. Jackson v Thomasson 1 B & S 747, and Coles v Coles, L R 1 P & M 70 71, that a necessary witness, that is, one whom a party is compelled to call and who may therefore be considered rather the witness

S. 155: cross examined implies an admission by the cross examiner that all the witness's statements are falsehoods. The correct view was in my opinion expressed in Jehanqir v Emperor, 106 Ind Cas 100=29 Bom L R 996=A I R 1927 Bom 501. More over the opinion of Lord Campbell have never been followed in England and the English Law upon which the Indian Evidence Act is founded was clearly stated by Tindal C J in Bradley v Ricardo, 8 Bing 57=1 L J C P 36. Shorai Sao v Emperor, A I R 1930 Pat 250=11 P L T 148. But in a very recent case the Calcutta High Court took a different view Panchanon v Emperor, A I R 1930 Cal 276.

155 The credit of a witness may be impeached in the following ways by the adverse party, or, with the consent of the Court, by the party who calls him —

Impeaching credit of witness

- (1) by the evidence of persons who testify that they, from their knowledge of the witness, believe him to be unworthy of credit,
- (2) by proof that the witness has been bribed, or has accepted the offer of a bribe or has received any other corrupt inducement to give his evidence,
- (3) by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted,
- (4) when a man is prosecuted for rape or an attempt to ravish, it may be shown that the prosecutrix was of generally immoral character

Explanation — A witness declaring another witness to be unworthy of credit may not upon his examination-in-chief, give reasons for his belief, but he may be asked his reasons in cross-examination, and the answers which he gives cannot be contradicted, though if they are false, he may afterwards be charged with giving false evidence

Illustrations

(a) A sues B for the price of goods sold and delivered to B. C says that A delivered the goods to B.

Evidence is offered to show that, on a previous occasion, he said that he had not delivered the goods to B.

The evidence is admissible.

(b) A is indicted for the murder of B.

C says that B, when dying, declared that A had given B the wound of which he died.

Evidence is offered to show that, on a previous occasion, C said that the wound was not given by A or in his presence.

The evidence is admissible.

Scope of the section. Besides being asked questions tending to discredit a witness may be discredited by the evidence of other persons to the effect that (1) they from their knowledge of the witness, believe him to be unworthy of credit, (2) that the witness has been bribed or has accepted the offer of a

*This word "accepted" in s 155 para (2) was substituted for the original word "had" by the Indian Evidence Act Amendment Act (18 of 1872) s 11.

bribe, (3) that he has on former occasions made statements inconsistent with his present evidence, and (4), in prosecutions for rape or attempts to rape in which the prosecutrix is a witness, that she was of generally immoral character. Any of the above facts may be proved by the party cross-examining a witness and, with the consent of the Court, by the party who calls him. Here, again, precautions are taken to prevent the Court going into relevant controversy by the following rule. Where a witness states that he believes another to be unworthy of credit, he may not, in his examination in chief, be asked his reasons for so believing, but in cross-examination he may be asked for his reasons and his answers to such questions cannot be contradicted, though of course, they may render him subsequently liable to a prosecution for giving false evidence. It is clear that but for some such rule, there might be a pitched battle fought over the character of every witness, and that suits would be simply interminable. Cun Ev 67. Cross-examination is by no means the only method of impeaching the credit of a witness. What he states is fact may always be disproved by other independent witnesses. Generally speaking a party cannot discredit his own witness. He puts him forward as the witness of truth, and though the story he tells may not be so favourable as was anticipated, that affords no just ground for seeking to induce the Court to believe that the witness is not worthy of credit. Where the witness turns round upon the party who calls him, is evidently hostile, or the like, the case is different, and the section provides that the party, with the leave of the Court, may proceed to impeach the credit of his own witnesses. Nort Ev 334. 'In addition to counter proofs and cross-examination,' says Mr. Best, "there are three ways of throwing discredit on the testimony of an adversary's witness (1) By giving evidence of his general bad character for veracity, i.e. the evidence of person who depose that he is in their judgment unworthy of belief, even though he made the statement on his oath. And here the enquiry must be limited to what they know of his general character, on which alone judgment should be founded, particular facts cannot be gone into, (2) By showing that his bad on former occasions made statements inconsistent with the evidence he has given. (3) By proving misconduct connected with proceedings or other circumstances showing that he does not stand indifferent between the contending parties. Thus it may be proved that a witness has been bribed to give his evidence or has offered bribes to others to give evidence for the party whom he favours, or that he has used expressions of animosity and revenge towards the party against whom he bears testimony etc." Best c 644. The Indian Legislature have accepted the first two instances in toto and has taken only that part of misconduct which consists in taking bribery. It is always admissible to prove that a witness has taken bribe to give his evidence. Langhori's Case, 7 How St. Tr 446. Att Gen v Huteoel, 1 Lx Ch 91. The last instance is also taken from the English law but it is only applicable in a case of rape and when the prosecutrix is examined.

Under the provisions of section 155 of the Evidence Act the credit of a witness may be impeached by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of the statement which is liable to be contradicted. U Po Sang v G Kyi Maung A. I R 1927 Rang 247 = 6 Bur L J 86 = 104 Ind Cas 377 = A I R 1927 Rang 247. This section does not allow evidence of witness's general bad character to be brought in. Maung San v Emperor, Ind Rul (1930) Rang 91.

Clause (1). This clause is chiefly based on Queen v Brown, L R 1 C C R 70 = 36 L J M C 59. At the close of the case for the prosecution the counsel after having called several witnesses to character proposed to call witnesses to prove that they would not believe the witnesses for prosecution, on their oaths. The Court decided on refusing to receive such evidence. The defendants were found guilty, but were admitted to bail to appear at the next Court of Quarter Sessions for the North Riding of Yorkshire, to receive judgment. At the request of the defendant's counsel, this case was submitted by the Court for the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal, whether the evidence tendered by the defendant's counsel ought to have been received or not. The Court consisting of Kelly C B, Martin B and Byles Keating and Shee JJ declining to hear any further argument on the subject observed that all the text-writers were agreed that the evidence could be given, and that the practice was so ancient and hitherto so undoubted, that it would not be altered now unless by the authority of the legislature. So evidence in all cases is admissible to show that an opponent's witness bears such a character and reputation that he is unworthy of belief. R v Watson, 2 Stark 139. Garrow's proposed questions being, 'Have you the means of knowing what the general character of his witness was?' and 'From such knowledge of his general character would you believe him on his oath?' Mason v Hartshill, 4 Esp 1102 (1802), followed in R v Brown L R 1 C C R 70, Lord Ellenborough said: "The question might be put in that way as it would then be open for the opposite side to ask about the means of knowing the witness's character so that it could be judged of what degree of credit was due to the assertion, for the means that witness then called had of informing himself and forming his judgment." In practice the question may be shortened thus: "From your knowledge of the witness would you believe him on his oath?" Phelps 478. In Layton's Trial 16 How St Tr 253, counsel asked: "Is he a man as may be believed even upon his oath, or not?" Witness: "I must tell you that I found him in so many mistakes about his own wife that by God I would not take his word for a half penny." So the law is that "you may ask, whether the witness is to be believed upon his oath which the course of law not going to particular facts." Per Lord Eldon in Anon 3 Ves & B 93 see also Carlos v Brook 10 Ves Jr 49 per Lord Eldon, L C, R v Rudge Park Add Cts 232, McDonough's Trial 30 How St Tr 20, Pheder's Trial, 30 How St Tr 214, Picton's Trial, 30 How St Tr 259, Walmore v Dickinson, 2 Ves & B 268. In Sharp v Seoging, Holt N P 511 Gibbs C J said: "When you endeavour to destroy the credit of a witness you are permitted to call other witnesses who know him, and ask them this general question: would you believe such a man upon his oath?" See also Thistlewood's Trial, 33 How St Tr 812, Davidson's Trial, 33 How St Tr 1440 1441, May v Brown, 3 B & C 126. In the last-named case Bayley J, said: "When the credit of a witness is objected to general evidence that he is not to be believed an oath is admissible, but specific evidence that at some period he had committed a particular crime is not admissible." Similarly in R v Watson, 2 Stark 151-32 How St Tr 495 Abbott J said: "The usual question put for the purpose of discrediting the testimony of a witness is, would you believe that witness upon his oath." In the same case Bayley J said: "The witness may state that he is not a man to be believed upon his oath." See also R v Clarke, 2 Stark 211, R v Bispham, 4 C & P 392, R v Hemp 5 C & P 468, R v Nichols, 5 C & P 600, R v Tinsington, 1 Cox Cr 48 R v Duffy, 7 State Tr N S 79. So 'the regular mode is to enquire whether they have the means of knowing the former witness's general character and whether from such knowledge they would believe him on his oath.' Phillipps Evidence 1st Ed 109. Commenting on this passage Prof Wigmore says: "We are now in a position to understand the language of the classical treatise-writers of the early 1800's. In Phillipps' passage for instance, so often quoted in his country, he used 'general character' not in the sense of 'reputation, but of general traits or qualities as distinguished from particular acts and from specific quality of credibility.' This is shown by a collection of the statements of other text writers of the time. They had two important rules in mind (1) that you cannot give evidence of particular acts and (2), that (as just pointed out) you cannot against a witness speak of his general qualities unless you follow it up with specific quality of credibility, and it was in trying to make this plain that they employed the term 'general character', nay meaning of 'reputation', as distinguished from personal knowledge, was far from their minds and would have been repudiated. In modern practice, the ruling in R v Routon L & C 520, seems not to have been regarded as affecting testimony to a witness's character and the orthodox and traditional use of personal knowledge still obtains, both in practice and in law." R v Brown, 10 Cox Cr 153, Wigmore § 1932.

S. 155

Mr Evans in his notes to Pothier said: "It is an established rule that witnesses examined with a view to discredit the testimony of others cannot be admitted to depose to particular facts of criminality but can only express their general opinion whether the party is or is not entitled to be believed upon his oath." Vide 1st Ed 11, 260. So also Mr Stephen in his History of Criminal Law Vol I, at p 437 said "The witness may, however, be impeached by witnesses who will swear in general terms that he is not worthy of credit on oath" So the law in England all along is that in examination in chief evidence is to be given of several traits or qualities as distinguished from particular acts. The same law is laid down in this section also, as will be apparent from the explanation, which enjoins that in cross examination he may be asked his reasons for his belief

S.155

Estimate of a witness in another case Evidence of a particular estimate formed by a Judge in another case of the credit to be attached to the testimony of a witness who is cross examined in a subsequent trial, is inadmissible. In the matter of Pasumarti Jagappa 4 C W N 684, see also Seamen vetherclift, L R 2 P D 53, R v Bottomly, Times, Feb 7, 1893. The question whether a witness is entitled to credit or not must be decided by a Court on the evidence before it, and not on what another Court thought of the witness in another case, and therefore the opinion of Court in another case as to the witness cannot be put in to impeach his credit. Chandreshwar Prasad v Bisheswar Prasad, A I R 1927 Pat 61=101 Ind Cas 289=5 P 777

Re-establishment of credit "Where the general reputation of a witness has been thus impeached, the party calling him may re-establish his credit, by cross-examining the witnesses (vide Explanation), who have spoken against him as to the means of knowledge and grounds of their opinion (Mawson v Hart, 4 Esp 103 104) or as to their hostile feelings towards the person whose testimony they have discredited, or as to their own character and conduct, or by calling other witnesses, either to support the character of the first witness (R v Murphy 19 How St Tr 724, 725), or to attack in their turn the general reputation of the impeaching witnesses" Taylor § 1473. "When B is brought forward to impeach A, and C to impeach B, it is obvious that not only might there be no end of this process, but the real issues of the case might be wholly lost sight of in a mass of testimony amounting to not much more than mutual verification. Three courses are open to pursue: first, to exclude absolutely the impeachment of the character of an impeaching witness, secondly, to admit the impeachment of an impeaching witness, but no more, thirdly, to admit it only to such an extent as the discretion of the trial Court deems best. The preferable rule is the third" Wigmore § 895

Foundation for discrediting a witness By the English law it is necessary, before giving evidence for the purpose of discrediting a witness to lay a foundation for the evidence to be given by the interrogation of the witness himself and his denial. This is not necessary under the present Act. Cum Ev 386

Clause (2)—By proof that the witness has been bribed or has accepted the offer of a bribe etc The word "accepted" was substituted by Act XVIII of 1872 for the word "offered". This substitution was probably made in accordance with the rule of law laid down in 1st Gen v Hutchcock 16 L J Ex 299=1 Ex 91, where the defendant a maltster, was charged on information with having used a cistern for the making of malt, without making an entry thereof, as required by Act of Parliament. A witness, having sworn that the cistern had been used, was asked if he had not said to one Cook that the excise officers had offered him £20 to say the cistern had been used, and he denied that he had made such statement. The defendant's Counsel thereupon called Cook, and proposed to ask him whether the witness had told him so. The evidence was disallowed. Pollock C B in delivering his judgment said "In the present case it would not be proved that a bribe was offered to the witness and not accepted, for such a fact is clearly irrelevant to the matter in issue. The offer of a bribe is a matter of no importance, if it be not accepted for it does not disparage the party to whom it is offered." In the same case Alderson B said "The offer of a bribe by a witness to another, or the fact of a bribe having been accepted by him, tends to show that he is not impartial." Rolfe B added "The offer of a bribe if rejected, has no bearing upon the credit of the witness." The alteration, says Mr Justice Cunningham like several of the amendments introduced by Act XVIII of 1872, appears to have been made

- S 155. without adequate regard to the considerations which led the original framers of the Act to word it as they did' Cun Lr 137. But it must be admitted that where the witness in question has merely been offered a bribe, no inference of any sort as to the witness's testimony can be drawn—the rejection of the bribe deprives the offer of all its force in that respect. From the point of view of the party offering it, of course such an attempt at corruption is admissible against him as showing his consciousness of a bad cause, but this involves the necessity of proving the identity of the offer with the party,—a matter not always feasible. Higmore § 962.

Receipt of money for testimony. The witness's receipt of money for testimony may indicate corruption in two ways: first, from the conduct in receiving it, may be inferred a willingness to speak falsely; secondly, from the fact of its having been received or promised, may be inferred an interest in favour of the cause of the giver, just as any fact of pecuniary interests makes probable such a partiality. Higmore § 961.

Clausula (3)—Evidence of former inconsistent statement. Vide illustrations (a) and (b). Any statement, verbal as well as written, may be used for this purpose. The witness must be specifically asked whether he made such and such statements, before he can be contradicted by them through another witness. Where the statement is in writing, rule ante, section 145 Norton Et 331. "Another thing" says Chief Baron Gilbert "that derogates from the credit of a witness is, if upon oath he affirmed directly contrary to what he asserts, and thus takes from the witness all credibility in as much as contraries cannot be true. Now that which sets aside his credit and overthrows his testimony is the repugnancy of his evidence, if what he says be contradictory, that removes him from all credit for things totally opposite cannot receive belief from the attestation of any man." Gilbert's Evidence pp 117, 150. We simply set the two against each other, perceive that both cannot be correct and immediately conclude that he has erred in one or the other, but without determining which one. It is the repugnancy and inconsistency that demonstrates his error, and not the superior credibility of the prior statement. Thus we do not necessarily accept his former statement as replacing his present one, the one merely neutralizes the other as a trustworthy one." Higmore § 1018. It is no violation of the Hearsay Rule because Hearsay Rule simply forbids the use of extra judicial utterances as credible testimonial assertions: the prior contradiction is not offered as a testimonial assertion to be relied upon. Ibid. In 1st Gen v Hitchcock, 1 Ex cb 101, Alderson B said: "When the question is not relevant, strictly speaking to the issue but tending directly to contradict the witness, his answer must be taken [although it tends to show that he in that particular instance speaks falsely, and although it is (thus) not altogether immaterial to the issue] for the sake of the general public convenience for great inconvenience would follow from a continual course of those sorts of cross-examinations which would let in in the case of a witness being called for the purpose of contradictions." So for reasons of auxiliary policy inconsistent statements on collateral matters cannot be shown, this section lays down the same rule. In Khadajah v Abdool Kurreem 17 C 344 Wilson J said: "I am inclined to think that in s 155 (3) of the Evidence Act the words, 'which is liable to be contradicted,' mean 'which is relevant to the issue.'" Now the question is what matters are not relevant. The only test in vogue that has the qualities of a true test—definiteness, concreteness, and ease of application—is that laid down in Attorney General v Hitchcock, supra. Could the facts, as to which the prior self contradiction is predicated have been shown in evidence for any purpose independently of the self contradiction?" In that case Pollock C B, said: "My view has always been that the test whether the matter is collateral or not is this. If the answer of a witness is a matter which you would be allowed on your part to prove in evidence, if it have such a connection with the issue that you would be allowed to give in evidence then it is a matter on which you can contradict him." In the same case Alderson B said: "The question is this, can you ask a witness as to what he is supposed to have said on a previous occasion? You may ask him any fact material to the issue, and if he denies it you may prove that fact, as you are at liberty to prove any fact material to the issue."

The language of s 155 (3) of the Evidence Act is prima facie wide enough to permit such questions as asking the investigating officers if certain witnesses made certain statements. But where the evidence has been reduced into writing it is undesirable to permit the putting of such questions. In such a case the written record made by the police officer is the only proper and right thing to prove to discredit the witnesses. If police diary is used the provisions of s 145 Evidence Act and s 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code will have to be borne in mind. A copy of the statement made before the police cannot be used against the witness till he has been confronted with it. The right procedure then when a prosecution witness is contradicting himself is to ask the Judge to look into the diary and decide whether the accused person should not have a copy of the statement. Kashi Ram v Emperor 26 A L J 130=A I R 1928 All 280=109 Ind Cas 120. The first information report against the accused is admissible under this section and may be relied on by the defence to impeach the informant's credit. Azimuddy v Emperor, 44 C L J 253=A I R 1927 Cal 17.

Statements made by third parties to the police in the course of their investigation are admissible to impeach the credit under s 155 of the Evidence Act provided the person who made the statement is called as a witness. Azimuddy v Emperor 44 C L J 253=A I R 1927 Cal 17. Statements made before a police officer and reduced to writing are admissible in evidence under this section to contradict a witness subject only to this that the provisions of section 145 of the Evidence Act had been complied with in the matter of putting specific part of it which were to be relied upon, to the witness in cross examination. Thomas v Kedar Nath 30 C W N 835=91 Ind Cas 801=A I R 1925 Cal 1017, see also Ram Charitar v Emperor, 3 Pat L J 568=4 Pat L W 325=45 Ind Cas 272=19 Cr L J 512.

A statement made by a witness before a Coroner under the Coroner's Act is admissible in evidence at the trial of the accused. Emperor v Ragho 22 Bom L R 775=97 Ind Cas 37=27 Cr L J 1061=A I R 1926 B 404, In re Bayana, 2 Weir 821. When the persons who made certain statements are called as witness then those statements become admissible, not as substantive evidence in the case, but merely as evidence to corroborate or contradict their statements in Court. Nagina v Emperor 19 A L J 447, see also, Malaya Goudan In re, 14 L W 612=(1921) M W N 872.

The statements of witnesses examined in a judicial proceeding cannot be used in any subsequent judicial proceedings when any of the conditions laid down in section 33 of the Evidence Act are wanting. But such statements can be used either to contradict them under s 155 (3) or to corroborate them under s 157 of the Act. Hussania v Sahib Nur, 86 P W R 190=7 Ind Cas 505.

It is not illegal to examine a police officer for the purpose of impeaching the credit of a witness who gives evidence in favour of an accused at his trial having previously given a statement to the police officer different from and inconsistent with his subsequent statement at the trial. Emperor v Jagordeo, 27 A 469=A W N 1905 64.

Former statement made by two persons implicating the accused can be used under s 155 (3) of the Evidence Act for discrediting their evidence given in the case. Emperor v Cherath 26 M 191=2 Weir 820, Harbans v Emperor, 16 C W N 431=13 Cr L J 445=15 Ind Cas 77, Queen Empress v Sitaram, 11 B 657. In a police investigation where the statement is not reduced to writing the officer may be examined to impeach the credit of a witness who made such statement, under s 155 of the Evidence Act. Reg v Ullamchand, 11 B H C 120. The record of statement made by witnesses during police investigation is not admissible as an independent evidence. But such statement may be proved either to contradict or to corroborate the testimony of the same witness in Court. Bahawala v Empress, 17 P R. 1886 Cr.

Section 155 only lays down that the credit of a witness may be impeached inter alia by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his

- S 155. evidence which is liable to be contradicted, but it does not lay down the manner in which the former statement is to be proved. The mode of proof of such a statement in writing when it is sought to be tendered in evidence for contradicting a witness is provided in s 145. In other words s 155 is controlled by s 145 and is not independent of it. Gopichand v Emperor, A I R 1930 Lah 491

When a Receiver appointed by the District Court sent a report to the Court, about 24 hours after the occurrence, to the effect that he was wrongfully confined and obstructed in the discharge of his duties by a number of persons it is open to the defence to use it under this section to impeach the credit of the receiver. Emperor v Ramchandra 55 C 879=111 Ind Cas 327=A I R 1928 Cal 732

Section 27 of the Evidence Act remains unaffected by the latest amendment of s 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code but ss 155 and 157 are affected except in the only instance mentioned in the proviso of s 162, Cr Pro Code. Emperor v Naga Tha Din A I R 1926 Rang 116=4 Rang 72=27 Cr L J 1061=5 Bur L J 30 (F B)

Previous depositions of witnesses examined for the prosecution in a criminal trial can not be used to contradict what the witnesses state in their cross examination in the present trial. Jamal v Emperor, 86 Ind Cas 153=26 Cr L J 713=A I R 1925 Pat 391

A recital as to the date of birth in a guardianship application is not by itself admissible in evidence but if the persons who made the statement is dead or cannot be found or had special means of knowledge it will be admissible. If he is examined as a witness his credit may be impeached by producing the same. Prohlad v Ramsaran 38 C L J 213

Preliminary warning. To obviate the objection of unfair surprise, a natural expedient is to ask the witness, while on the stand under cross examination, whether he made the supposed contradictory statement. He is thus warned that it will be offered against him by testimony later produced and he may thus either prepare to deny it if he claims not to have made it or explain it, if he admits having made it. The rule is thus stated by Abbott C J in The Queen's Case, 2 B & B 313. "If it be intended to bring the credit of a witness into question by proof of anything he may have said or declared touching the cause the witness is first asked upon cross-examination, whether or not he has said or declared that which is intended to be proved. If the witness admits the words or declarations imputed to him, the proof on the other side becomes unnecessary and the witness has an opportunity of giving such reason, explanation or exculpation of his conduct if any there be as the particular circumstances of the transaction may happen to furnish, and thus the whole matter is brought before the Court at once, which in our opinion is the most convenient course. [If the witness denies the utterance or claims the privilege of silence], the proof in contradiction will be received at the proper season. But the possibility that the witness may decline to answer the question affords no sufficient reason for not giving him the opportunity of answering and of offering such explanatory or exculpatory matter as I have before alluded to. So that if evidence of this sort could be adduced on the sudden and by surprise without any previous intimation to the witness or to the party producing him, great injustice might be done."

and one of the great objects of the course of proceeding established in our Courts is the prevention of surprise as far as practicable, upon any person who may appear therein'. Wignmore § 1025. If the previous deposition was intended to contradict the witness at the trial it was contrary to principle to admit the evidence in the manner adopted without first drawing the attention of the witness to every point upon which it was to be used to contradict him. If the statement was intended to corroborate the witness as a whole, it could not have been put in cross-examination. Emperor v Lakshman Totaram 17 Bom L R 590=31 Ind Cas 351=16 Cr L J 751. If a Magistrate finds that a witness is recorded in the police investigation as having made a statement different from that he has made before him and he considers that the discrepancy should be brought to light, he ought to ask the witness if he has made the statement attributed to him by the police papers. If he admits it, he should be given an opportunity of explaining why the contradiction has occurred. If he denies having made such a statement, then the statement must be duly proved before it can be used to impeach his credit. It is not like a deposition made in the committing Magistrate's Court which could be taken off the file of that Court and brought on the record of the Court of Session without any proof because the deposition proves itself. Not so a statement attributed to a witness on police papers. Nga Pui v Emperor 18 Cr L J 814=41 Ind Cr 668=10 Bur L T 259. Under this section, a witness cannot be contradicted by his previous statement if his attention has not been drawn to it as required by s 145 of the said Act. Mt Amir Begam v Mt Begam, 9 P W R 1911=127 P L R 1914=22 Ind Cr 361.

Proviso (4) One of the relevant uses is that of the character of a rape complainant for chastity. The non consent of the complainant is here a material element, and the character of the woman as to chastity is of considerable probative value in judging of the likelihood of that consent. Wigmore § 62. In R v Ryan, 2 Cox Cr 115 Platt B said: "It is important to consider whether a young person in such a state of incapacity was likely to consent to the embraces of this man because if her habits however irresponsible she might be were loose and indecent, there might be a probability of consent being given and a jury might not think it safe to conclude that she was not willing, partly." General evidence, therefore, of this kind will be received though the woman be not called as a witness and though if called she be not asked, on cross-examination, any questions tending to impeach her character for chastity (R v Clarke, 2 Stark R 241 R v Chase, 1r R 375) but it seems that the counsel for the defence cannot go further and prove specific immoral acts with the prisoner unless he has first given the prosecutrix an opportunity of denying or explaining them. R v Cockcroft 11 Cox 410 R v Martin 6 C & P 61, R v Robins, 2 M & Rob 512. It further appears to be the law that although the prosecutrix may be cross-examined as to particular acts of immorality with other men, she may decline to answer such question and if she answers them in the negative witness cannot be called to contradict her. R v Cockcroft 11 Cox 410 R v Holmes and Furness, 41 L J M C 12 Taylor § 363. It thus becomes necessary to discriminate between the general character or trait for unchastity and the specific acts of unchastity. Wigmore § 62. The reason in favour of the above rule is thus strongly put by Strong J in People v Jackson 3 Purk Cr 393: "In any case a single aberration from virtue in one whose general character for chastity is otherwise unimpeachable, would raise so slight an inference, if any, of non-resistance to a brutal outrage from a person (or indeed any one except him to whom she has already yielded) that it could not justify a departure from the ordinary rules of evidence. Besides, if proof of particular instances should be admissible, rebutting evidence would be allowable, and thus there might be one or more collateral issues to occupy the time and divert the attention of the jury. Such would be the evils if the prosecution could require previous and timely notice of the particulars of the intended attack upon the conduct of the complainant, but as no such notice can be enacted, there would be no means of meeting the evidence, of the disolute companions of the accused, however mistaken or corrupt it might be, and thus the character of an innocent and greatly abused female might be sacrificed and the ends of public justice be defeated." In a rape case the general immoral character of the woman is relevant evidence as enacted in this clause. Keramat v King Emperor A I R 1926 Cal 320=92 Ind Cas 439=27 Cr L J 263=42 C L J 524. The prosecutrix may be cross-examined as to particular discreditable transactions (R v Barker 3 C & P 589), and as to her having had connection with the prisoner previously to the alleged rape (R v Martin, 6 C & P 362) and if she denies such connection the prisoner may show that she had been previously connected with him. R v Ismail, 3 Stark Ec 3rd Ed. 952, appeared in R v Raby, 18 Q B D 151.

Explanation. In the examination in-chief a witness cannot be asked the reasons for his belief that another witness is unworthy of credit. Such questions can only be asked in the cross-examination. But it is very dangerous in cross-examination to ask a witness his reasons for believing a witness to be

S. 156. untrustworthy. Ho is, by such a question, enabled to state any unfavourable fact without fear of contradiction. Cum I 388

Impeaching credit of one's own witnesses. A party is not obliged to receive an unimpeached truth every thing which a witness called by him may swear to. If the witness has been false or mistaken in his testimony, he may prove the truth by others. Brown v Bellou, 1 Pick 187, 191 (Am). According to English law "a party is never permitted to produce general evidence to discredit his own witness, for that would be to enable him to destroy the witness if he spoke against him, and to make him a good witness if he spoke for him" with the means in his hands of destroying his credit if he spoke against him". Buller's Trials at Assi Prus p. 207. But not on this reason it is said "(It is improper that) an untruth or incredible or unreliable witness by reason of moral infirmity may not be unmasked by any party in interest. What more absurd than to ask a jury to find truth upon the testimony of a witness notorious for not speaking the truth, all the while concealing from them the fact that he is or may be a false witness, and how can it be of importance to the main purpose of the trial how or by whom the fact that the witness is not to be relied upon is made known? If he betrays the party who calls him, and falsifies in every statement which he makes, the opposite party will of course accept the treason, say nothing of impeachment, and leave the jury no alternative but to find an unjust verdict upon evidence which both the parties know to be rankest perjury. Certainly a rule which may produce such a result ought to be at once discarded unless it can be shown to be of some special use in the general purposes of legal controversy that a Court of justice should permit such a miscarriage on the merits, because it sees or fancies it sees a shadow of unfairness in one of the parties in a matter collateral to the suit and in no way touching the justice of the case, is a reproach which ought to be done away. No body can profit by the rule but the witness and the antagonist of the party who calls him and they only by the defeat of the ends of justice". May C J in Some Rules of Evidence 11 American Law Review p. 267, Wigmore § 899. The Indian Legislature wisely departed from the English law and provides that a party may impeach the credit of his own witness with the consent of the Court. The evidence of a witness who is hostile to the Crown may be impeached by reference to the police diary. If in the course of a trial a witness is called upon and says that offence was committed by an entirely different person it is only fair that the Crown should be allowed to use the diaries under s. 155 of the Evidence Act, to disabuse the jury of the effect of a wilfully false statement. Ramcharita v Emperor, 3 Pat. L. J. 568-4 Pat. L. W. 335-45 Ind. Cas. 272-19 Cr. L. J. 512.

156 When a witness whom it is intended to corroborate gives evidence of any relevant fact, he may be questioned as to any other circumstances which he observed at or near to the time or place at which such relevant fact occurred, if the Court is of opinion that such circumstances, if proved, would corroborate the testimony of the witness as to the relevant fact which he testifies.

Illustration

A an accomplice, gives an account of a robbery in which he took part. He describes various incidents unconnected with the robbery which occurred on his way to and from the place where it was committed.

Independent evidence of these facts may be given in order to corroborate his evidence as to the robbery itself.

Scope of the section. This section provides for the admission of evidence given for the purpose only of proving a relevant fact but of testing the witness's truthfulness. There is often no better way of doing this than by ascertaining the accuracy of his evidence as to surrounding circumstances, though they are not so immediately connected with the facts of the case as to be themselves irrelevant. While, on the one hand, important corroboration may be given in the case of a truthful witness, a valuable field for cross-examination and exposure is offered in the case of a false witness. In order to prepare the ground of their corroboration, it is necessary to elicit these surrounding circumstances in the first instance from the witness himself, and for this the section makes the provision Cun Ev 388. This section, in effect, declares evidence of certain facts to be admissible, and if it had not been inserted the Judge would have had to determine the relevancy of these facts by reference to sections 7 and 11, and he might perhaps have been influenced by the practice in England which has been against the admission of such evidence Markby Ev 109, 110. Facts which tend to render more probable the truth of a witness's testimony on any material point are admissible in corroboration thereof, although otherwise irrelevant to the issue and although happening before the date of the fact to be corroborated. But facts which are not more consistent with the truth of such testimony than the reverse are inadmissible. The corroborative facts and evidence must however, be proved otherwise than by the testimony of the witness to be corroborated, and the question of their admissibility is one of law for the Judge and not one of fact for the jury Phips Ev 482-3. It is not incumbent on a party to give corroborative evidence of statements not challenged by the other party. Moultrie Mahomed v Will is, 11 C W N 946.

Corroborative evidence, meaning of. The statutory definition is that corroborative evidence is additional evidence of a different character, to the same point. Underhill defines it as additional evidence proving similar facts or facts calculated to produce the same results as facts already given in evidence. This distinction between corroborative and cumulative evidence is clearly marked, although ordinarily, corroborative evidence simply means fortifying evidence, whether it is evidence of different or similar facts, or additional evidence of the same fact. Burr Jones § 8(b).

157 In order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact at or about the time when the fact took place, or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact may be proved.

Former statements of witness may be proved to corroborate later testimony as to same fact.

English law Facts which tend to render more probable the truth of a witness's testimony on any material point are admissible in corroboration thereof, although otherwise irrelevant to the issue and although happening before the date of the fact to be corroborated. Wilcox v Godfrey, 26 L J N S 481. But facts which are not more consistent with the truth of such testimony than the reverse are inadmissible. Whenever the testimony of a witness is challenged by cross-examination or otherwise, corroboration thereof is allowable, and in certain cases no verdict can be obtained without the production of such evidence. The corroborative facts and evidence must however be proved otherwise than by the testimony of the witness to be corroborated. Formerly the fact that a witness had made a previous statement similar to his testimony in Court could always be proved to confine his testimony. But afterwards the rule was changed, and such evidence is now generally inadmissible either on direct examination to confirm his testimony, or on re-examination to re-establish his credit, when impeached by proof of a previous contradictory statement. (Physon Li 149). When the witness has merely testified on direct examination, without any impeachment, proof of consistent statements is unnecessary and valueless. The witness is not helped by it, for, even if it be an improbable or untrustworthy story, it is not made more probable or more trustworthy by a number of repetitions of it. Such evidence would be both irrelevant and cumbersome to the trial, and is rejected in all Courts. Wignote § 1121.

S 157.

Reasons of objection under English law to corroborative evidences before any impeachment. In Elliot v Pearl, 10 Pat 139, Story J said "His testimony under oath is better evidence than his confirmatory declarations not under oath, and the repetition of his assertion does not carry his credibility further, if so far as his oath." Similarly in State v Parish, 79 N C 612, Reade J said "It can scarcely be satisfactory to any mind to say that, if a witness testifies to a statement to day under oath, it strengthens the statement to prove that he said the same thing yesterday when not under oath. The idea that the mere repetition of a story gives it any force or prove its truth is contrary to common observation and experience that a falsehood may be repeated as often as the truth. Indeed it has never been supposed by any writer or Judge that the repetition had any force as substantive evidence to prove the facts, but only to remove an imputation upon the witness. If he stood before the Court unimpeached it was unnecessary and mischievous to encumber the Court and oppress the defendant with his garrulousness out of Court and when not on oath. Wigmore § 1124

Whether this section violates the Hearsay Rule. "Though Hearsay may not be allowed as direct evidence, yet it may be in corroboration of a witness's testimony to show that he affirmed the same thing before on other occasions and that the witness is still consistent with himself. Gilbert Evidence, 68, 150. In this instance the utterance is used otherwise than as an assertion to be credited, and therefore the Hearsay rule is not applicable. Wigmore § 1792

Scope of this section. This section following Act II of 1855, in opposition to the generally received rule in England, allows a witness to be corroborated by proof that he has said the same thing on a previous occasion, the only condition being that his previous statement shall have been made either about the time of the occurrence or before a competent authority. This condition is, to some extent, a safeguard against fictitious statements designedly made to support subsequent evidence, but it is obvious that the corroborative value of such previous statement depends entirely on the circumstances of each case, and that they may easily be entirely valueless. As independent evidence of a fact statements are by section 8, relevant as conduct, if they accompany and explain facts other than statements. The mere fact of a man saying on a previous occasion made the same assertion adds but infinitesimally to the chances of its truthfulness, and Judges should distinguish it from really corroborative evidence. Cun Ev § 157. In Reg v Malapa, 11 B H C Rep 196, Namabhai Haridas, J said section 157 of the Evidence Act, no doubt provides that any former statements made by a witness at or about the time when the fact in issue took place, or before any competent authority may be proved to corroborate his testimony, and accordingly the Session Judge has made use of Mergia's statements made on different occasions to his parents and to Police Officers shortly after the murder. But such corroboration we think, hardly suffices. It can scarcely be said to answer the purpose for which juries are advised by Judges to require the evidence of an accomplice to be confirmed. From the position in which he stands it is considered unsafe to act upon his evidence alone. Hence the rule requiring confirmation of it as to the prisoner's guilt by some independent reliable evidence. But his statement whether made at the trial or before the trial, and in whatever shape it comes before the Court is still only the statement of an accomplice and does not at all improve in value by repetition. The force of any corroboration by means of previous consistent statements must evidently depend upon the truth of the proposition that he who is consistent deserves to be believed. If that proposition be not universally true what becomes of the virtue of previous consistent statements? One may persistently adhere to falsehood once uttered, there is a motive for it and should the value of such a corroboration ever come to be rated higher than it now is, nothing would be easier than for designing an unscrupulous person to procure the conviction of any innocent man, who might be obnoxious to them, by first committing offences, and afterwards making statements, to different people at different times and places, implicating those innocent men

This section provides an exception to the general rule of excluding hearsay evidence and in order to bring a statement within the exception, the duty is cast on the prosecution to establish by clear and unequivocal evidence the proximity of time between the taking place of the fact and the making of the statement. Mangat Rai v. Emperor, 10 Lah L J 262=110 Ind Cas 676=29 Cr L J 740=A I R 1923 Lah 617. There is no obligation on the Crown to call witnesses whose evidence will be merely relevant under s 157 of the Evidence Act. Muthua v. Emperor, 10 Pat L J 117=8 Pat 625=A I R 1929 Pat 313. A statement by the father in the vaccination register made after three years after the birth of the child does not satisfy the terms of s 157 of the Evidence Act and the same cannot be relied upon to prove the paternity of the child. Kunnuaphan v. Kullinnal, 1929 M W N 696. A sale deed dated 1910 by one N in favour of B recited all the circumstances leading to the sale. It also contained a recital as follows:—“About a year ago I came to Poonna and asked my uncles and my step brothers to effect a partition and to allot to me my one ninth share of our ancestral property but they refused to give my share.” It was contended that the recitals in the deed were not admissible as evidence against the uncles or cousins of N on the issue whether N demanded a share of the property in 1909 as it did not come within s 157. Held that though the particular statement did not come within s 157 on the ground that it was not made at or about the time of N's alleged interview with his uncle in 1909 but the deed was admissible in evidence as corroboration of the evidence given by N and his witnesses upon other material matters. Radhoba v. Aburao, 36 I A 316=53 B 699=31 Bom L R 1030=27 A L J 1031=33 C W N 6006.

Sections 157 to 167 Criminal Procedure Code leave no doubt that Police officers entitled to investigate in offence are the Police officers referred to in the Criminal Procedure Code; i.e., the Station House officer or his superior officer within the limits of the local area of this jurisdiction. Therefore an inspector of the C I D who is not one of such officers is not ‘legally competent to investigate’ and so his evidence is not admissible under s 157 of the Evidence Act. The power to investigate must be given to him by law. Whether any authority is legally competent to investigate the fact or not is not a question of fact or a mixed question of fact or law. King Emperor v. Nilalanta, 1912 M W N 207=13 Cr L J 305=23 M L J 490=11 M L J Sup 1=35 M 247=14 Ind Cas 819. The object and effect of section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to place the deposition in the committal enquiry on exactly the same footing as the deposition in the Sessions Court. Such deposition is testimony within the meaning of s 157 of the Evidence Act, while a prior statement by the witness during the police investigation is inadmissible in evidence to corroborate. Mam Chand v. The Crown, 5 Lah 324=83 Ind Cas 129=25 Cr L J 1201. In a suit for possession of land if the opposite party disputes the boundaries of the land in suit, it is open to the plaintiff to produce the documents relating to neighbouring lands in which there is recital as to particular boundaries of the land in suit, and such documents will be admissible to prove the plaintiff's title if the persons in whose favour the documents are executed are examined and admit the correctness of the boundaries. Moham Chandia v. Kanailal, A I R 1930 Cal 311=33 C W N 1193.

Absence of substantive evidence. In the absence of substantive evidence, first information report and other reports by witness cannot be used as corroborative evidence consequently, where a prosecution witness has gone back on the original complaint made to the police the previous statement cannot be used as corroborative evidence. Emperor v. Nga Hlang, 6 R 481=A I R 1928 Rang 295. Earlier statements cannot be let in under section 157 of the Indian Evidence Act if there is nothing in the deposition of the witness in the present trial which may be corroborated by the earlier statements. Ahyraddin v. Emperor, 42 C L J 509. Entries in the police diaries and the complainant's statements recorded after the investigation commenced cannot be substantive evidence. Girimalla v. Government, 3 Mys L J 237.

Time for giving corroborative evidence. Before corroborative evidence is admissible, the evidence sought to be corroborated must have been given

can be used as corroboration under s 157 of the Evidence Act, provided the person who made the statement is called as a witness. Azmuddy v Emperor, 14 C L J 253 = A I R 1927 Cal 17. Statements made by a witness to the police are relevant only for the purpose of contradicting his testimony and the statements made to the Deputy Commissioner and to the committing Magistrate only for the purpose of contradicting or corroborating that testimony. These statements cannot be treated as substantive evidence like the statements made by a witness at the trial. It is impossible to place any reliance on the statement of a witness at the trial when it is in hopeless conflict with her previous statements. Ramlaran v Emperor, 7 Lab L J 371 = 26 P L R 659 = A I R 1927 Lah 493. Oral accounts of statements made by witnesses to the police in the course of an investigation under s 151 Cr Pro Code are admissible under section 157 of the Evidence Act to corroborate the statements of those witnesses at the trial, although the written records of such statements are rendered inadmissible under s 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Baladeo v Emperor, 6 Pat L J 241 = 2 Pat L T 565 = 61 Ind Crs 785 = 22 Cr L J 433. Statements of witnesses made to the police should not be used to corroborate them except in very special circumstances. Ram Chariter v Emperor, 4 Pat L W 325 = 3 Pat L J 568 = 45 Ind Crs 272 = 19 Cr L J 512.

Whether this section is affected by s 162. Section 157 of the Evidence Act is affected by s 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code so far as statements to the Police taken under s 161 whether oral or recorded are concerned. Emperor v Abu Tha Din 4 Rang 72 = 96 Ind, Crs 145 = 27 Cr L J 881 = 5 Bur L J 30 = A I R 1926 Rang 116 (F B). The main object of the legislature in enacting this section was to prohibit the use of the statements of prosecution witnesses as corroborative under s 157 of the Evidence Act. Jagya Dhanul v Emperor 5 Pat 63 = 93 Ind Crs 831 = 7 Pat L J 396 = 27 Cr L J 484 = A I R 1926 Pat 232. The general rule laid down in section 157, Evidence Act, is controlled by the special provisions contained in s 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Not only is the record of the statement of a witness to the police taken under s 161 excluded from evidence but even the proof of such statement by oral evidence for the purpose of corroborating the prosecution evidence. Balha v The Crown, 20 P L R 304 = 6 Lab 171 = A I R 1925 Lab 399. The words 'legally competent' in s 157, Evidence Act mean having power under some law tributary or otherwise. Section 157, Evidence Act is clearly controlled by s 162 Criminal Procedure Code. Emperor v Ramasamudhan Pillai, 25 M L T 879 = (1919) M W N 199 = 50 Ind Crs 831 = 20 Cr L J 351, Ruston v King Emperor 7 A L J 463 = 6 Ind Crs 101 per Knox J.

Section 162 Criminal Procedure Code prohibits only the use, as evidence of the writing which records the statements of the witnesses made to the investigating Police officer, that section, so far as oral statements of the witnesses are concerned, is not in conflict with s 157, Evidence Act, and the oral statements made to Police officer may be proved by calling him as a witness in order to corroborate the testimony of the witnesses. Bhulal v K E, 13 C W N 197. Per Karamat Hussain J in Ruston v King Emperor 7 A L J 463 = 11 Cr L J 235 = 6 Ind Crs 101. See also Emperor v Hanmasuddi, 16 Bom L R 603 = 26 Ind Crs 139, Imperatrix v Jyibhai, 22 B 396, Bhulal v King Emperor 13 O C 7 = 5 Ind Crs 357 = 11 Cr L J 117.

Deposition before committing Magistrate. The effect of section 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to place the deposition of a witness before the committing Magistrate exactly on the same footing as the deposition in the Sessions Court. It is 'testimony' within the meaning of s 157 of the Evidence Act and statements made by the witnesses before the investigating officer are admissible for the purpose of corroborating such testimony. It is in the discretion of the Sessions Judge to believe and act upon the statements before the committing Magistrate in preference to contradictory statements made before himself on the ground that the former are corroborated by statements made before the investigating officer. Felliah Kone, In re, 45 M 700 = 43 M L J 222 = 16 L W 259 = 31 M L T 145 (H C).

S 157 Astarince v Rai Aundo, 5 C W N XVI It is doubtful whether s 136 gives the Court any discretion to allow evidence to corroborate a witness to be given under s 157, before the witness himself is examined. M. Hynn v King Emperor 5 L B R 19 Cr L J 76=2 Ind Cas 349 Ordinarily, before corroborative evidence is admissible, the evidence sought to be corroborated must have been given. The Court has no doubt a discretion to allow evidence to be given under s 157 out of the regular order, but such discretion should be rarely used and only for very special reasons. To allow a witness to be corroborated, before he is examined, is not only inconvenient, but likely to cause the Judge or Jury to give undue weight to the hearsay statements of the corroborating witness. It is not clear that such a discretion is given by s 136 of the Evidence Act. Shere Khan v King Emperor, 3 L B R 210=5 Cr L J 111

Test identification Any Magistrate is competent to hold a test identification and can prove the statements made before him under s 157 of the Evidence Act even though he is not empowered to deal with the matter under enquiry. Also s 161, Criminal Procedure Code, covers the case where a Magistrate acts under s 157, Evidence Act, and records a statement made to him. Samuddin v Emperor, 32 C W N 616=109 Ind Cas 225=29 Cr L J 197=A I R 1928 Cal 500 Evidence of identification in the trial cannot be treated as substantive independent evidence in the trial. Such identification amounts to statements, either express or implied, made by certain persons whom they recognize as having been concerned in a particular crime. These statements are not made on oath and are made in the course of extrajudicial proceedings. When the persons who make these statements are called as witnesses, then those statements become admissible, not as substantive evidence in the case, but merely as evidence to corroborate or contradict his statements in Court. When such a person states in Court that he can identify no one there is obviously nothing to corroborate and so the evidence of identification in the trial is not admissible. Nagina v Emperor, 19 A L J 947 For corroborating a witness his statement before competent police officer at the identification parade held by the police in the course of the investigation may be proved by oral evidence though the written record of the statement is not admissible. Emperor v Wahiduddin A I R 1930 Bom 153=32 Bom L R 327

First information report The first information report against the accused is admissible under s 157 of the Evidence Act to corroborate prosecution case. Azmuddy v Emperor, 41 C L J 250=A I R 1927 Cal 17, Chogatta v Emperor 91 Ind Cas 697=27 Cr L J 121=A I R 1926 Lah 179 Section 154 of the Criminal Procedure Code clearly contemplates the first information received to be recorded and not a statement made by a witness during investigation after the Sub-Inspector has actually arrived on the scene and himself seen what has happened. Technically speaking it may be conceded that a first information report taken down by a police officer amounts to an entry in an official record, stating a fact in issue or relevant fact, and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty and in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by law under which such record is kept. But that would simply make it a relevant fact. A report of the commission of an offence made at a police station or even the deposition of a witness previously made would be admissible for the purpose of corroborating him or of throwing doubt on his statement in Court but would be inadmissible for the purpose of proving the facts stated in it is correct. Chittor Singh v Emperor, 47A 280=23 A L J 14=80 Ind Cas 650 The first information report although a document of great importance is not a piece of substantive evidence, and can be used only as a previous statement admissible to corroborate or contradict the author of it and for no other purpose. In re Sankaralinga Phelan, Ind Rul (1930) Mad 698 see also Anwar Singh v Emperor 21 Ind Cas 882=17 C W N 1213=14 Cr L J 642 Azmuddy v Emperor 99 Ind Cas 227=44 C L J 203=A I R 1927 Cal 17=28 Cr L J 237, Sankaralinga v Emperor, A I R 1930 Mad 632=58 M L J 397

Statements made to police by third parties in the course of investigation Statements made by third parties to the police in the course of their investigation

can be used as corroboration under s 157 of the Evidence Act, provided the person who made the statement is called as a witness. Azmuddy v Emperor, 44 C L J 253 = A I R 1927 Cil 17. Statements made by a witness to the police are relevant only for the purpose of contradicting his testimony and the statements made to the Deputy Commissioner and to the committing Magistrate only for the purpose of contradicting or corroborating that testimony. These statements cannot be treated as substantive evidence like the statements made by a witness at the trial. It is impossible to place any reliance on the statement of a witness at the trial when it is in hopeless conflict with her previous statements. Ramlaran v Emperor 7 Lah L J 371 = 26 P L R 609 = A I R 1925 Lah 483. Oral accounts of statements made by witnesses to the police in the course of an investigation under s 151 Cr Pro Code are admissible under section 157 of the Evidence Act, to corroborate the statements of those witnesses at the trial, although the written records of such statements are rendered inadmissible under s 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Baladeo v Emperor 6 Pat L J 241 = 2 Pat L T 565 = 61 Ind Cas 780 = 22 Cr L J 433. Statements of witnesses made to the police should not be used to corroborate them except in very special circumstances. Ram Chariter v Emperor, 4 Pat L W 325 = 3 Pat L J 568 = 45 Ind Cas 272 = 19 Cr L J 512.

Whether this section is affected by s 162. Section 157 of the Evidence Act is affected by s 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code so far as statements to the Police taken under s 161 whether oral or recorded are concerned. Emperor v Nju Tha Din 4 Rang 72 = 96 Ind Cas 145 = 27 Cr L J 931 = 5 Bur L J 30 = A I R 1926 Rang 116 (F B). The main object of the legislature in enacting this section was to prohibit the use of the statements of prosecution witnesses as corroborative under s 157 of the Evidence Act. Jagua Dhanul v Emperor 5 Pat 63 = 93 Ind Cas 834 = 7 Pat L J 396 = 27 Cr L J 484 = A I R 1926 Pat 232. The general rule laid down in section 157, Evidence Act is controlled by the special provisions contained in s 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Not only is the record of the statement of a witness to the police taken under s 161 excluded from evidence but even the proof of such statement by oral evidence for the purpose of corroborating the prosecution evidence. Bulha v The Crown 26 P L R 304 = 6 Lah 171 = A I R 1925 Lah 399. The words "legally competent" in s 157, Evidence Act mean having power under same law statutory or otherwise. Section 157, Evidence Act is clearly controlled by s 162 Criminal Procedure Code. Emperor v Kumaramu than Pillai, 25 M L T 879 = (1919) M W N 199 = 50 Ind Cas 834 = 20 Cr L J 304, Ruston v King Emperor 7 A L J 469 = 6 Ind Cas 101 per Anon J.

Section 162 Criminal Procedure Code prohibits only the use as evidence, of the writing which records the statements of the witnesses made to the investigating Police officer, that section, so far as oral statements of the witnesses are concerned, is not in conflict with s 157 Evidence Act and the oral statements made to Police officer may be proved by calling him as a witness in order to corroborate the testimony of the witnesses. Bhulal v A E, 13 C W N 197. Per Karamat Hussain J dissenting in Ruston v King Emperor, 7 A L J 468 = 11 Cr L J 235 = 6 Ind Cas 101. See also Emperor v Hanmasuddi, 16 Bom L R 603 = 26 Ind Cas 138, Imperatrix v Jyibhai, 22 B 596. Bhulal v King Emperor 13 O C 7 = 5 Ind Cas 357 = 11 Cr L J 117.

Deposition before committing Magistrate. The effect of section 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to place the deposition of a witness before the committing Magistrate exactly on the same footing as the deposition in the Sessions Court. It is 'testimony' within the meaning of s 157 of the Evidence Act and statements made by the witness before the investigating officer are admissible for the purpose of corroborating such testimony. It is in the discretion of the Sessions Judge to believe and act upon the statements before the committing Magistrate in preference to contradictory statements made before himself on the ground that the former are corroborated by statements made before the investigating officer. Felliah Kone In re, 45 M 766 = 43 M L J 222 = 16 L W 239 = 31 M L T 175 (H C).

S 157

What former statement can be given as corroborative evidence Where the owners of the lands adjacent to the disputed land were examined as witnesses in the case and certain documents evidencing their purchases were sought to be let in evidence, the documents are admissible in order to corroborate the oral testimony of the witnesses and that once they are admissible, the Court may look into their contents as it may think fit since there is no provision in the Indian Evidence Act which prohibits such a course Sheikh Hatabuddin v Asfor Chaudia, 11 C L J 532=99 Ind Cas 907=A I R 1927 Cal 230 The trial Judge in a civil suit permitted an officer in charge of the Record of Right proceedings to be called as the very first witness and to produce the statements of witnesses recorded in those proceedings, which were exhibited notwithstanding the objection raised in that behalf Held that only parts of such statements, as were necessary to corroborate or contradict the witness when they were examined in the case, could be put in through them under the provision of s 157 Mt Halima v Mt Jandi 103 Ind Cas 570=A I R 1927 Sind 209 A petition put in by a client for adjournment on the ground that her pleader could not appear on account of hastal is admissible in evidence in proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act under s 157 of the Evidence Act in corroboration of the evidence which the witness has already given at the time, when his attention was directed to its contents and when he said the contents were true to his knowledge Emperor v Rajam, 49 C 732=26 C W N 589=35 C L J 358

The entries in the diary of a deceased chaukidar relating to birth and death are not admissible under s 32 sub-section (2) of the Evidence Act Where from the evidence it appears that the entries were not made by the chaukidar at all as he was an illiterate person but by other persons who deposed that they made the entries at the request of the chaukidar Held that the entries are admissible in evidence under s 157 or s 159 of the Evidence Act or possibly under both sections Nanna Koor v Gobordhan 1919 Pat 332=2 Pat L J 42=37 Ind Cas 124, Baldeo v Abhoy Ram 12 A L J 945=24 Ind Cas 540

Where a person making a dying declaration chooses to live, his statement cannot be admitted in evidence as dying declaration under s 32 of the Evidence Act but it may be relied on under s 157 of the Evidence Act, to corroborate the testimony of the complainant when examined in the case Emperor v Rama, 4 Bom L R 434

Where the question is whether a transaction is a sale or a mortgage and a person sues to reduce the property on the ground that the transaction is only a mortgage, but the defendant contends that it is a sale, the burden of proof rests on the defendant to prove the sale, at any rate in the first instance If mutation of name has taken place the pyatpang or outerfoil of the revenue register of mutations if not signed by the owner of the land, is not admissible in evidence to prove the report of the transaction made to the headman or surveyor who maintains the register But if such officer is called as a witness and gives evidence of the terms of the report from his own memory then such pyatpang is admissible in order to corroborate his testimony under s 157 Shue Pan v Maung Po 3 L B R 250

A statement made by a witness to a chief constable can only be used under s 157 of the Evidence Act to corroborate the evidence of the first witness at the trial Such a statement standing by itself can furnish no legal basis for a conviction Queen Empress v Yakub, R 11 Un Cr C 508

Previous statements might be used to corroborate or contradict statements made at the trial not to corroborate statements made prior to trial Emperor v Akbar Badu, 12 Bom L R 663=7 Ind Cas 933=11 Cr L J 542=34 B 599

A police inspector is an officer legally competent to investigate the fact under s 157 of the Evidence Act, and therefore statements made to him by the approvers are admissible under that section Muthu Kumara Swami v Emperor 1912 M W N 549=13 Cr L J 352=14 Ind Cas 896=35 M 397

Where a letter written by a witness to a third person was missing and the witness wrote another letter to which he got a reply containing a statement of what that witness had written previously to such person held that the reply was not admissible in evidence to corroborate the evidence of the witness. Held that the oral testimony of such person, if he was alive, may be admissible under s 157 Evidence Act. Evidence of the fact that a statement was made by a third person to the witness is admissible but evidence of the terms of the statement is inadmissible. In re Subrahmanya, 2 Weir 823. S 157.

Deposition of a witness in the previous Sessions trial is admissible under this section. Empress v Ishar Singh, 8 A 672 = A W, N 1886, 257.

A statement by a person at an inquest can only be used to corroborate or to contradict a subsequent statement of the same person admissible in evidence. But when the subsequent statement is itself unworthy of credit it cannot be materially strengthened by showing that the witness had previously (at the inquest) made a statement partly in agreement and partly in direct material disagreement with it. In re Bayanna 2 Weir 821.

Under the general provision of law any body who has seen a place may be examined as to what he saw. A Kanungo making the inquiry may give his deposition and his report is admissible under s 157 of the Evidence Act in order to corroborate his own sworn testimony. Achambit v Sarada 12 Cr L J 480 = 12 Ind Cis 83.

It is doubtful whether a statement as to an event, made three days after its occurrence is admissible under s 157 of the Evidence Act, to corroborate the witness who made the statement. Logana Fluor 6 M L J 17 = 11 Cr L J 30 = 4 Ind Cis 700.

The record of statements made by witnesses during a police investigation is not admissible as an independent evidence. But such statements may be proved either to contradict or corroborate the testimony of the same witness. Bihawal v Empress 17 P R 1886 Cr. A statement of a raped girl that she had been raped in answer to enquiries by persons who saw her raped is admissible under s 157 of the Evidence Act. Goora Lal v Emperor 25 Cr L J 1211 = 92 Ind Cis 112.

What statement cannot be used as corroborative evidence. This section cannot be invoked to let in statements made by some body also as evidence for the purpose of corroboration of a witness examined in the case. Imbia Chohan v Humud Mohan, 110 Ind Cis 521 = A I R 1928 Cal 893. A letter written by a Police officer to his superior expressing that a certain person would make a certain statement for a certain sum of money is not under s 157 properly receivable in evidence for any purpose. Bhogilal v Royal Insurance Co, 6 Rmg, 142 = 26 A. L. J 377 = 32 C W N 593 = 103 Ind Cis 1 = 47 C L J 350 = 30 Bom L R 818 = 23 L W 276 = A I R 1923 P C 51 = 34 M L J 545 (P C). Oral statements by witnesses in Police investigation which do not corroborate the evidence at the trial are inadmissible. Venkata Subbaita v Emperor, 48 M 610 = 21 L W 190 = 1925 M W N 68 = 86 Ind Cas 409 = 26 Cr L J 721 = A I R 1925 M 579 = 48 M L J 195. A statement made to a Police officer, not being a first information under s 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, can be proved only by the Police officer that the particular statement was made to him. Salun v Emperor, 61 Ind Cis 640 = 22 Cr L J 110. The previous statement of an accomplice is no corroboration of his evidence. It must be corroborated as regards every material particular and the identity of the accused must be proved by reliable independent testimony. Pij v Malapa 11 B II C 196. Although the mere repetition of a statement without contradiction of material discrepancy, is under section 157 Evidence Act some corroboration of the truthfulness of that statement that section does not justify the use against accused persons of a previous statement by an approver relevant to contradict his retraction. Pallata v Emperor 3 P R 1904 Cr. Where an entry in the vaccination register, which includes a statement by a woman that a person, bearing the name of the alleged father of her illegitimate child, was the father of the illegitimate child, is made three years after its birth the entry does not satisfy the terms of s 157, and is not admissible in evidence. Kanaijappa v Kulkarni A. I R 1930 Mad. 191 = 1929 M. W. N 696.

S. 157

What former statement can be given as corroborative evidence Where the owners of the lands adjacent to the disputed land were examined as witnesses in the case and certain documents evidencing their purchases were sought to be let in evidence, the documents are admissible in order to corroborate the oral testimony of the witnesses and that once they are admissible, the Court may look into their contents as it may think fit since there is no provision in the Indian Evidence Act which prohibits such a course Sheikh Ketabuddin v Nafar Chandra, 41 C L J 582=99 Ind Cas 907=A I R 1927 Cal 230 The trial Judge in a civil suit permitted an officer in charge of the Record of Right proceedings to be called as the very first witness and to produce the statements of witnesses recorded in those proceedings, which were exhibited notwithstanding the objection raised in that behalf Held that only parts of such statements, as were necessary to corroborate or contradict the witnesses when they were examined in the case, could be put in through them under the provision of s 157 Mt Halima v Mt Jhandi 103 Ind Cas 870=A I R 1927 Sind 209 A petition put in by a client for adjournment on the ground that her pleader could not appear on account of hatal is admissible in evidence in proceedings under the Legal Practitioner's Act under s 157 of the Evidence Act in corroboration of the evidence which the witness has already given at the time, when his attention was directed to its contents and when he said the contents were true to his knowledge Emperor v Hajam, 49 C 732=26 C W N 589=35 C L J 356

The entries in the diary of a deceased chaudidar relating to birth and death are not admissible under s 32 sub section (2) of the Evidence Act Where from the evidence it appears that the entries were not made by the chaudidar at all as he was an illiterate person but by other persons who deposed that they made the entries at the request of the chaudidar Held that the entries are admissible in evidence under s 157 or s 159 of the Evidence Act or possibly under both sections Nana Koei v Gobordhan 1919 Pat 352=2 Pat L J 42=37 Ind Cas 424, Baldie v Abhoy Ram, 12 A L J 945=24 Ind Cas 540

Where a person making a dying declaration chances to live, his statement cannot be admitted in evidence as dying declaration under s 32 of the Evidence Act but it may be relied on under s 157 of the Evidence Act, to corroborate the testimony of the complainant when examined in the case Emperor v Rama, 4 Bom L R 434

Where the question is whether a transaction is a sale or a mortgage and a person sues to reduce the property on the ground that the transaction is only a mortgage, but the defendant contends that it is a sale, the burden of proof rests on the defendant to prove the sale at any rate, in the first instance If mutation of name has taken place, the pyatpang or outerfoil of the revenue register of mutations if not signed by the owner of the land, is not admissible in evidence to prove the report of the transaction made to the headman or surveyor, who maintains the register But if such officer is called as a witness and gives evidence of the terms of the report from his own memory then such pyatpang is admissible in order to corroborate his testimony under s 157 Shue Pan v Maung Po, 3 L B R 250

A statement made by a witness to a chief constable can only be used under s 157 of the Evidence Act to corroborate the evidence of the first witness at the trial Such a statement standing by itself can furnish no legal basis for a conviction Queen Empress v Yalub, Rat Un Cr C 508

Previous statements might be used to corroborate or contradict statements made at the trial, not to corroborate statements made prior to trial Emperor v Akbar Badu, 12 Bom L R 613=7 Ind Cas 933=11 Cr L J 542=34 B 599

A police inspector is an officer legally competent to investigate the fact under s 157 of the Evidence Act, and therefore statements made to him by the approvers are admissible under that section Muthu Kumara Saami v Emperor 1912 M W N 549=13 Cr L J 352=14 Ind Cas 696=35 M 397

Where a letter written by a witness to a third person was missing and the witness wrote another letter to which he got a reply containing a statement of

what that witness had written previously to such person held that the reply was not admissible in evidence to corroborate the evidence of the witness. Held also that the oral testimony of such person, if he was alive may be admissible under s 157 Evidence Act. Evidence of the fact that a statement was made by a third person to the witness is admissible, but evidence of the terms of the statement is inadmissible. In re Subrahmanya, 2 Weir 823

Deposition of a witness in the previous Sessions trial is admissible under this section. Empress v Ishni Singh, 8 A 672 = A W, N 1886, 257

A statement by a person at an inquest can only be used to corroborate or to contradict a subsequent statement of the same person admissible in evidence. But when the subsequent statement is itself unworthy of credit it cannot be materially strengthened by showing that the witness had previously (at the inquest) made a statement partly in agreement and partly in direct material disagreement with it. In re Bajanna 2 Weir 821

Under the general provision of law any body who has seen a place may be examined as to what he saw. A Kamungo making the inquiry may give his deposition and his report is admissible under s 157 of the Evidence Act in order to corroborate his own sworn testimony. Ichambit v Savada 12 Cr L J 480 = 12 Ind Cis 88

It is doubtful whether a statement as to an event, made three days after its occurrence is admissible under s 157 of the Evidence Act, to corroborate the witness who made the statement. Logana Phuar, 6 M L J 17 = 11 Cr L J 30 = 4 Ind Cis 700

The record of statements made by witnesses during a police investigation is not admissible as an independent evidence. But such statements may be proved either to contradict or corroborate the testimony of the same witness. Bihawal v Empress 17 P R 1886 Cr. A statement of a raped girl that she had been raped in answer to enquiries by persons who saw her raped is admissible under s 157 of the Evidence Act. Goora Lal v Emperor, 20 Cr L J 1214 = 82 Ind Cis 142

What statement cannot be used as corroborative evidence. This section cannot be invoked to let in statements made by some body else as evidence for the purpose of corroboration of a witness examined in the case. Imbica Charan v Kumud Mohan, 110 Ind Cis 521 = A I R 1928 Cil 893. A letter written by a Police officer to his superior expressing that a certain person would make a certain statement for a certain sum of money is not under s 157 properly receivable in evidence for any purpose. Bhogilal v Royal Insurance Co, 6 Ring 112 = 26 A L J 377 = 32 C W N 593 = 103 Ind Cis 1 = 47 C L J 550 = 30 Bom L R 818 = 28 L W 276 = A I R 1923 P C 51 = 51 M L J 515 (P C). Oral statements by witnesses in Police investigation which do not corroborate their evidence at the trial are inadmissible. Venkata Subbiah v Emperor, 18 M 640 = 31 L W 190 = 1925 M W N 68 = 86 Ind Cis 209 = 26 Cr L J 721 = A I R 1925 M 579 = 48 M L J 197. A statement made to a Police officer, not being a first information under s 151 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, can be proved only by the Police officer that the particular statement was made to him. Salim v Emperor, 61 Ind Cis 640 = 22 Cr L J 410. The previous statement of an accomplice is no corroboration of his evidence. It must be corroborated as regards every material particular and the identity of the accused must be proved by reliable independent testimony. Rej v Malaya 11 B II C A C 196. Although the mere repetition of a statement, without contradiction of material discrepancy is under section 157 Evidence Act, some corroboration of the truthfulness of that statement, that section does not justify the use against accused persons of a previous statement by an approver relevant to contradict his retraction. Pattana v Emperor 3 P R 1901 Cr. Where an entry in the vaccination register, which included a statement by a woman that a person, bearing the name of the alleged father of her illegitimate child was the father of the illegitimate child, made three years after its birth, the entry does not satisfy the terms of s. 157, and is not admissible in evidence. Kannappa v Kullammal A I R 1930 Mad 191 = 1929 M W N 696

S 158

158 Whenever any statement, relevant under section

S 159

What matters may be proved in connection with proved statement relevant under section 32 or 33

32 or 33, is proved, all matters may be proved either in order to contradict or to corroborate it, or in order to impeach or confirm the credit of the person by whom it was made, which might have been proved if that person had been called as a witness and had denied upon cross-examination the truth of the matters suggested

Scope of the section. The statements admissible under sections 32 and 33 are exceptional cases and the evidence is only admitted from the improbability or great inconvenience of producing the authors of the statements. It is only just therefore that all the same safeguards for veracity should be provided as if the authors of the statements were themselves before the Court and subjected to oath and cross examination. No 1 Evidence, 355. This section places a person whose statement has been used as evidence under s 32 in the same category as a witness actually produced in Court for the purpose of contradicting his statement by a previous statement made by him. Therefore a statement which has been admitted in evidence under s 33 may be contradicted by another statement of the same person made to police during investigation. Hari Ram v Emperor, A I R 1926 Lah 122. Under this section the question whether a witness is entitled to credit or not must be decided by a Court on the evidence before it and not on what another Court thought of the witness in another case because there are no means of judging whether the finding as to the credibility of the witness in the other proceeding is a right finding or not. Chandreswar v Bisheswar, 5 Pat 777. Where the statement of a witness previously made is used as evidence under the provisions of ss 32 and 33 then any other statement made by that witness can be used by virtue of s 158 for the purpose of contradicting that witness as if such witness had appeared in Court and was cross-examined on such previous statement and on question being asked had denied the facts mentioned in the same. Niamat Khan v Emperor A I R 1930 Lah 409.

159 A witness may, while under examination, refresh

his memory by referring to any writing made by himself at the time of the transaction concerning which he is questioned, or so soon afterwards that the Court considers it likely that the transaction was at that time fresh in his memory

The witness may also refer to any such writing made by any other person, and read by the witness within the time aforesaid, if when he read it he knew it to be correct

Whenever a witness may refresh his memory by reference to any document, he may, with the permission of the Court, refer to a copy of such document

When witness may use copy of document to refresh memory

Provided the Court be satisfied that there is sufficient reason for the non-production of the original

An expert may refresh his memory by reference to professional treatises

Principles. When a witness's statement is offered as the basis of an evidential inference to the truth of his statement, it is plain that at least three distinct elements are present, or put in another way, there are three processes, in the absence of any one which we cannot conceive of testimony. First, the witness must know something, to this element may be given the generic term Observation. Secondly, the witness must have a recollection of these impressions, the result of his observation, this may be termed Recollection. Thirdly, he must communicate this recollection to the tribunal, that is, there must be Communication, or Narration or Relation. Wigmore § 478. Now the element of Recollection thus stands between the element of Observation or Knowledge which it reproduces and the element of Communication or (Narration) by which it is in turn reproduced and made apprehensible by others. The general canon applicable to Recollection is simple: the Recollection should (as far as can be expected) correspond to and represent the impressions originally gained by observation or knowledge. Various situations are conceivable in which this essential quality of Recollection may be lacking, and various detailed requirements with reference to curing or avoiding these possible deficiencies are also conceivable. Wigmore § 725. The cardinal principle of Narration is this, that it must correspond to the Recollection, the story told by the witness, whether orally or in writing, must represent his knowledge and recollection. Wigmore § 734.

It is to day generally understood that there are two sorts of recollection which are properly available for a witness,—past recollection and present recollection. In the latter and usual sort, the witness has either a sufficiently clear recollection or can summon it and make it distinct and actual if he can stimulate and refresh it, and the chief question is as to the propriety of certain means of stimulating it,—in particular of using written or printed notes, memoranda, or other things as representing it. In the former sort, the witness is totally lacking in present recollection and cannot revive it by stimulation, but there was a time when he did have a sufficient recollection and when it was recorded, so that he can adopt this record of his then existing recollection and use it as sufficiently representing the tenor of his knowledge on the subject. This use of a past recollection depends of course on certain conditions, while the stimulation of an actual present recollection need be subject to fixed rules, and it is through the improper application of the limitations of the one case to the other that some confusion of decisions has arisen. Greenl. Ev. § 439. (1) section 159 deals with Present Recollection and section 160 refers to Past Recollection.

Present Recollection whether there should be any fixed rules of limitation. "Here the witness is proceeding to testify from a present and existing recollection, but he is unable to produce that recollection by an undirected effort, and the question is whether a resort to notes, etc., to stimulate and receive it is under the circumstances improper. The vagaries of memories being infinite, it will be futile for the law to attempt to determine by fixed rules what things have or have not a potency to stimulate recollection. It can only act on the circumstances of each case, excluding the desired aid only when it is apparent or likely that the witness is not really aided but is repeating a form of words of whose truth he has no knowledge. (1) Accordingly, so far as concerns stimulation by reference to a writing or the like, the fundamental notion is that any paper may in the circumstances be properly used for the purpose. (Laure v. Reed, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 15; note, Henry v. Lee, 2 Chitty 124). In particular, (2) that the paper is not written by the witness himself is no objection (Hurry v. Lee, supra; Laure v. Reed, supra; Smith v. Morgan, 2 Moo. & R. 257; R. v. Watson 3 C. & K. 111; R. v. Williams, 8 Cox Cr. 313), and it is therefore in correct (confusing this with the Past recollection) to require that the paper be one written by the witness or under his direction or known to him to be correct. Nevertheless, papers prepared by others may, under the circumstances of the case, be so suspicious or questionable as to make their use improper (Noel's Motion 3 F. R. 752, Ilcoet v. Ins Co 13 Q. B. D. 292, 305, Layr v. Haggstaff, 5 Beav. 462). (3) Further more it is not an objection that the paper is a copy, and not an original, provided it does in fact serve to revive the recollection. Turner v. Faylor 3 T. R. 751, Doe v. Perkins 3 T. R. 749, Ilton 1 Lew. Cr. 101, R. v. Williams, 8 Cox Cr. 313. (4) Again, it is equally immaterial that the paper was not made at or about the time of the event, for it is not used as a record of past memory and its power to stimulate and revive the memory by the allusions which it contains must be precisely the same whether it was made at the time or not. This is the necessary result of the principle involved and is maintained by a number of Courts (Bank v. Leu 11 S C 111 Tolson v. Long Drilling Co., 11 Wis 602), but many, misled by the limitation applicable to a record of past recollection, require that the paper should be one contemporaneous with the event. (Stenkelley v. Denton, 9 C & P 111 Whitfield v. Hand 2 C & K 1015) (5) Upon the erroneous view just referred to it has recently been declared that on being surprised by the testimony of one's own witness, one may not refer to former testimony or deposition by the same witness and endeavour to stimulate the memory to a correction by using this result chiefly on the supposed principle that the reference principle, as applied to refreshing by deposition or former testimony, is wholly unsound and may be understood by noting the numerous decisions in which this mode of refreshing has been allowed (R v. Hatton 1 C & K 111 R v. Williams, 8 Cox Cr 313, Smith v. Morgan, 2 Moo & R 277), while, independently of this supposed principle, there is no reason why refreshment may not be equally well attained by the counsel's oral reference to or reading from the deposition, etc. as by the witness's own perusal of it, and the precedents abundantly confirm this practice. (R v. Litchard, 8 C & P 26(31), R v. Barnet 1 Cox Cr 263 R v. Ford 5 Cox Cr 181, R v. Williams, 8 Cox Cr 313, R v. Quinn, 21 & P 818) (6) As a matter of fairness and to prevent imposition, the paper must be produced in Court on demand, for inspection and cross-examination by the opponent. (Hardy's Trial 21 How St Tr 824, R v. Ramsden 2 C & P 603, Lord v. Colvin, 2 Drest 203) (7) But since in Lord Ellenborough's words, it is not the memorandum that is the evidence but the recollection of the witness, (Henry v. Lee, 2 Chitty 124), the party whose witness uses it has no right to have it read to or handed to the jury, (Gregory Turner, 6 C & P 231), it is only the opponent who may do this in case he wishes to cast doubt on the reality of the refreshment of memory (Greenl Fv § 139(c))

S 159

Scope of the section It is a well settled and undisputed principle of the law of evidence, that a witness under certain legal restrictions, may refer to written or printed memoranda, documents, papers or letters for the purpose of refreshing, assisting and stimulating his recollection and memory with regard to the facts about which he is testifying. The rule requires that a witness should testify only to such facts as are within his own knowledge and recollection, but this requirement is not violated by permitting him to refresh his memory in the manner above indicated. Bentham has pointed out the advantages and disadvantages of allowing a witness on the stand to consult notes or memoranda for the purpose of refreshing the memory. 'On the one hand, what you want is a prompt and unpremeditated answer. If you allow him time to consult notes, you surely lose the advantage of that lively and quick examination which does not give him time to think.' Bentham, Principles of Judicial Evidence cited in Gondale Lc 207. On the other hand, if this assistance is denied, the witness will often be unable to give accurate and complete testimony and the whole object of the judicial investigation may be defeated. It is universally agreed that the balance between the two inconveniences is by no means equal, and that under proper limitations witnesses may resort to memoranda or writings in aid of memory. Such is the ordinary human memory that very few witnesses would be able to testify as to particular dates, numbers quantities and sums after the lapse of a few years if they were not permitted to refer to papers and writings which they knew to be correct at the time they were made. Burr Jones § 874. Mr Justice Strong in the United States Supreme Court, said "How few papers, not evidence per se, but proved to have been true statements of facts at the time they were made, are admissible in connection with the testimony of a witness who made them has been a frequent subject of inquiry, and it has many times been decided that they are to be received. And why they should not be? Quantities and values are retained in the memory with great difficulty. If at the time when an entry of aggregate quantity or value was made, and the witness knew it was correct, it is hard to see why it is not at least as reliable as is the memory of the witness." Insurance Co v Wicks, 14 Wall (S U S) 375. A witness, who has the means in his power, can lawfully be required to look at such papers, to enable him to ascertain a fact with more precision to verify a date or to give more exact testimony than he otherwise could as to times, numbers quantities and the like. Burr Jones s 874. "Although in general" says Mr Starkie leading questions are not to be put to a witness, yet where his memory has failed, he may even during examination, read, or if necessary, hear the contents of a document read for the purpose of reviving his former recollection. And if by that means he obtains a recollection of the facts themselves as distinct from the memorandum, his statement is admissible in evidence. A witness is of course, competent to testify as to his natural present recollection of a fact, although in the interval his memory may have failed, and although such defect and the means of restoration may be the subject of comment in cases to which any suspicion is attached. Starkie on Evidence p 209. "Generally speaking an instrument used for the purpose of refreshing memory, ought to be in the handwriting of the person using it, and as nearly as possible contemporaneous with the fact which it records, at the same time, neither of these conditions is absolutely indispensable. A witness may refresh his memory from a document written by another if at, or about the time it was made, he has seen and inspected it, if he examined it at the time and found it correct, and if it is the case that it does bring the fact to his memory. For instance, a ship's log book is usually written up by the mate yet the captain would be permitted to refresh his memory by it if he could swear that he examined it shortly after the time of the entry and that it was correct, and that by looking at the entry he remembered that the circumstance it narrated had taken place. So a shop keeper who has himself sold goods of which the accounts are kept by one in his employ if he has inspected the entries within reasonable time after the entry was made, would be allowed to refresh his memory by the memorandum, notwithstanding it was made by a third person, but it is evident that the weight to be attached to such testimony will vary according to circumstances. A man may refresh his memory as to the day on which certain proceedings at which he was present took place by referring to a newspaper containing a report of the proceeding which he read at the time the facts were fresh in his memory, and he knew the facts were correctly reported. Dyer v Best, 4 H & C 189. A Judge will attach much more weight to the evidence of a person speaking from a contemporaneous entry made by his own hand, than to that of one to whose memory the fact was recalled by a memorandum made by a third party, and which perhaps he had not seen for some time after it was made.

"In accordance with the rule which requires the production of the best evidence, the memorandum itself must be produced, not a copy of it, unless indeed, the Court is satisfied that the non production of the original has been sufficiently accounted for. It frequently happens that a witness makes an extract from his books, which would be themselves good sources for refreshing his memory, while the extract is a mere copy of such books is not receivable." Starkie on Evidence cited in Nort Ev 538 339. A witness who being asked in reference to any particular transaction, if he had made any entry in a register or book at or about the time when an occurrence took place such as the posting of a letter of which an entry was made might refer to such entry or memorandum to refresh his memory but beyond that he cannot go. Queen Empress v Sayad Surfuddin, Rat Un Cr C 344.

Where a witness during cross-examination is asked to refresh his memory by referring to a privileged document, he may be told that the consequence of his so referring to the document, would be to allow the other side to have a look at the document. Nemi Chand v Wallace, 4 C L J 268=10 C W N 107=4 Cr L J 247. A most regularly kept private diary containing records of facts contemporaneously in which may be used for contradicting or corroborating a witness or refreshing his memory and the like under ss 111 157 and 159 of the Act, but such user does not make the document itself evidence.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

S 159 Mulundaram v Dayaram, 10 N L R 44=23 Ind Cas 893, see also Nama Koer v Gobordhan, 2 Pat L J 42=37 Ind Cas 424 A certificate of age of a private patient is not relevant as a public record under s 35 of the Evidence Act but could only be used for the purpose of refreshing the memory when he is examined as a witness. Venkata Rungappa v Subbaraya Ganagan, 33 Ind Cas 142 A reference can be made to an old document for refreshing the memory in regards the date of death of a certain person. Syenuddin v Samiuddin, 72 Ind Cas 985=1923 Cal 378 If the witness be blind the paper may be read over to him for the purpose of exciting his recollections. Taylor § 1410 'If the witness cannot read and write, the proper practice is, not to read the memorandum to him in the presence of the jury, but to allow him to retire with counsel on each side and to have the memorandum read in his presence without comment.' Commonwealth v Farr 7 Gray (Mass) 585, Burr Jones § 884.

The dying statement of a deceased person must be taken in the presence of the accused, if not so taken, the writing cannot be admitted to prove the statement made. The statement may be proved in the ordinary way by a person who heard it, and the writing may be used for the purpose of refreshing the witness's memory. Empress v Samiuddin, 8 C 211 A medical expert can refer to his report to refresh his memory. Roghun v Empress, 9 C 457 (461)=11 C L R 569 see also 2 W R Cr Let. 14, 6 W R Cr Let. 8, P v Jadbab Das, 4 C W N 129 When a dead body is sent to the Civil Surgeon in order to the making of a post mortem examination, a printed form is sent therewith, which the Civil Surgeon fills up on examining the body of the Civil Surgeon, who refreshes his memory from its contents when giving his testimony. Field Ev 7th Ed 531=533 The record of the statement of the accused made by the herd constable cannot be used by itself as evidence. That is forbidden by section 162 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Properly speaking it could only be used by the Sub Inspector as a writing from which he refreshed his memory as to what was said by the accused. Emperor v Robert 31 C 1050 Memorandum by witness can be used in evidence not by itself but as corroborating a witness or refreshing his memory. Reyarsosah v Gobard, A I R 1930 Nag 24, see also Unkundaram v Dayaram, 16 N L R 41=23 Ind Cas 893

Any writing This section entitles a witness to refresh his memory by any writing. So he is permitted to refresh and assist his memory by the use of a written instrument, memorandum, or entry in a book. So a ledger, a log-book, a workman's time book, previous deposition, letter, bill of articles furnished, etc. can be seen by a witness to refresh his memory. Taylor Ev §§ 1400-1410. The pyatpang or outerfold of the revenue register of mutas may also be used for refreshing the memory of a witness. Shus Pan Ind Cas 335 For purposes of section 159 Indian Evidence Act 1872, it is not requisite that the writing used to refresh his memory should be admitted in evidence. Accordingly a document not produced in Court within the proper time and in consequence rejected as evidence under the provisions of Order XIII, r 2, C P C. may nevertheless be referred to by the party producing it or his witness to refresh his memory of the document and is otherwise within the purview of a 159 of the Evidence Act. The weight of the evidence, the objection to the document upon the ground that its not having been produced at the proper time renders its authenticity the subject of suspicion and all other grounds upon which a document can be successfully impeached still remain open, but refusal to permit a man to refresh his memory by proper relevant contemporaneous document might lead to a grave injustice. Jagan Lal v Nilmani, 33 I A 107=7 Pat. 305=30 Bom L R 305=107 Ind Cas 337=47 C L J 302=32 C W N 563=A L R 1929 P C 80=26 A L J 124 The word "writing" used in this section also includes printed matter. Hari Chandra v Emperor A L R 1930 Lah 371 Made by himself, The writing may have been made either by the witness himself, or by others, providing in the latter case, that it was read by him when the facts were fresh in his memory, and he knew the statement to be correct Phup Er 445 The witness must be able now to assert that the record accurately represents his knowledge and recollection at the time. The usual phrase requires the witness to affirm that he "knew it to be true at the time." Wigmore § 747 A witness may refresh his memory by referring to Jama usil baki papers when it was prepared by him on receiving the rent. Uhl v Naya, 10 C 248, Keramani v Bejoy, 7 W R 533, see also Mohomed v Sagar, 11 C 407, 409

At the time of the transaction The document must have been written either at the time of the transaction or so shortly afterwards that these facts were probably fresh in his memory. Burrough v Martin, 2 Camp 112, Whitefield v Aland, 2 C & K 1015, Talbot v Cusack, 17 Ir C L R 213. But so far as the present recollection as embodied in section 159 is concerned the fact that "the paper was not drawn up about the time of the events" should not be a fault. The recollection may be equally refreshed by a recent note or by some contemporaneous record. It might in fact be argued that there was less danger of reliance upon the record itself and more probability of actual refreshment where the paper was one confessedly having no value as a contemporaneous record of past recollection. There is adequate authority for the result thus required by principle. Yet the greater number of decisions, and most of the obiter dicta announce as a requirement that the memorandum used must have been made 'contemporaneously or nearly so' with the events 'at or near the time' with the same varying phrases used in the rule for Past Recollection." Wigmore § 761. The framers of the Indian Evidence Act in this respect also following the English rule did not make any discrimination between Present Recollection (s 159) and Past Recollection. So now the rule is that a witness may make use of notes taken at the time the fact happened. Kinlock's Case 25 How St Tr 937. "Where the witness goes back to a past recollection which can less easily be tested by cross examination, he may properly be asked for something more positive,—something of a quality satisfactory in itself and not merely the best available. This quality the law has attempted to define, and even to test by an arbitrary rule. There is found first, a general principle that the recollection, when recorded, should have been fairly fresh,—each instance being dealt with on its own circumstances, and, secondly, there is more commonly, an arbitrary list defining the recollection as are recorded at or near the time of the events." Wigmore § 745. In England it is not essential that the memorandum should have been made at the very time of the transaction, it is enough if it has been made by the witness, or by another with his privity, at the time when the facts were fresh in the recollection of the witness, and that the reading such memorandum restores the recollection of the fact which had faded in the memory, or enables him to swear to the truth of the fact. Russ Cr 2304 Wood v Cooper 1 C & K 645, 646. But in India the document must have been written either at the time of the transaction, or so shortly afterwards that the facts were probably fresh in his memory. Burrough v Martin, 2 Camp 112, Whitefield v Aland, 2 C & K 1015, Talbot v Cusack, 17 Ir C L R 213. A delay of forty night was held not to be fatal. R v Longton, 2 Q B D 296 but an interval of several weeks or six months was held to be so. R v Gordon Kinlock, 25 How St Tr 934, Jones v Shonel 2 C & P 196, Whitefield v Aland, supra, Steuililer v Newton, 9 C & P 315.

Writings made by any other person But this, testimonial guarantee of correctness being all that is needed, it is generally immaterial whether the witness was or was not the person who actually wrote or printed the record. It may have been manually prepared by another, but from the moment when the witness saw it and passed judgment upon its correctness, it became for him a correct record. As the mere fact of his writing it would count for nothing in itself so the mere fact of his not having been the writer is immaterial. Wigmore § 748. If the witness saw the writing soon after it was made, and the entry corresponded with what he had himself then observed, that was tantamount to an entry made by himself. Digby v Steelman 1 Esp 328, see also Jacob v Lindsay, 1 East 460, Burton v Plummer, 2 A & E 311, Toppin v Mc Gregor, 1 C & K 320, R v Philpots, 5 Cox Cr 329, Anderson v Walley,

S 159 3 C & K 51 R v Longton, L R 2 Q B D 296 In Burrough v Martin, 2 Camp 112 Lord Ellenborough said "If a witness looked at the log book from time to time, while the occurrences mentioned were recent, and fresh in his memory, it is as good as if he had written the whole with his hand." Similarly in Lord Talbot v Cusock 17 Ir C L R 213, O'Brien J said "(The use of memoranda made by the witness himself) has been extended to the case of entries which though not in the witness's hand-writing, were either made in his presence and read by him at the time of the transaction, and were read and examined by him shortly afterwards when the facts were fresh in his recollection and when he was enabled to ascertain that the facts stated in the entry were true." Wignmore § 748. When a witness wants to refresh his memory under this section, he is to do so by referring in Court to the document which he had read at or near the time of the transaction, and it is the fact that he had known it to be correct when he read it that is the justification for his doing so. It is quite immaterial that a document to which the witness refers in Court was not printed by the witness himself or in his presence. It is essential only that he should have read it at or soon after the transaction to which it relates. Ramchandra v Emperor, A I R 1930 Lah 371.

Inadmissible documents The document need not be admissible in evidence per se. Thus, an invalid lease (Dillon v Tomlin, 5 A. & E 856), or an irregular deposition (R v Monn, 49 J P 743), or an unstamped document (Burchall v Bullough 1896 1 Q B 325), may be referred. Phip Ev p 417.

Copies of documents Whether the witness can refresh his memory by referring to a mere copy of his original memorandum is a question of some difficulty and doubt in England. Taylor § 1408. That the paper is a copy, not an original, is no essential fault. The only question is whether in fact it is genuinely calculated to revive the witness's recollection, and for this purpose a copy may conceivably be entirely satisfactory. Tanner v Taylor, 3 T R 751, Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 How St Tr 619. Doe v Perkins, 20 How St Tr N S 785 (827). Gurdner Peccage Case Le Marchant's Rep 63, Anon, 1 Law Cr C 101, R v Williams 6 Cox Cr 343. On principle there is no necessity of accounting for the original in any way in the case of Present Recollection, Wignmore § 760. But as neither the English law nor the Indian Evidence Act makes any distinction between Present Recollection (s 159) and Past Recollection, use cannot be made of copies of a document unless the Court be satisfied that there is sufficient reason for the non production of the original. Ur Stakie lays down the rule as follows "In accordance with the rule which requires the production of the best evidence the memorandum itself must be produced not a copy of it unless, indeed, the Court is satisfied that the non production of the original has been sufficiently accounted for. It frequently happens that a witness makes an extract from his books which would be themselves good sources for refreshing his memory while the extract as a mere copy of such books is not receivable." Nort Ev 339. On principle if a copy is to be admitted under section 160 as a record of Past Recollection it gre it stingency should be observed in allowing the witness to use it. "It remains to make sure" says Prof Wignmore, "that the record which the witness now puts forward as a record of his prior knowledge is in fact the genuine embodiment of his past recollection. While the witness's guarantee of its correctness may be accepted the law may well insist on the production of his guaranteed paper, not merely as verifying the fact of its existence but also as insuring the correctness of his story as throwing additional light on his veracity, as affording a means of testing him and as the best proof of what was really recorded. In short, the original record itself must be used in testifying if it is procurable. This rule is almost universally recognized and of course, if the original is lost or otherwise unavailable a copy may then be used. Tanner v Taylor 3 T R, 751, Doe v Perkins, 3 T R, 751, Jones v Stroud, 2 C & P 196. R v Harley 11 Cox 546. R v St Martins, 2 A & E 210, Horne v Mackenzie 6 Cl & F 628, Topham v Mc Gregor, 1 C & K. 320, Lord Talbot v Cusock, 17 Ir C L R 213. It is true that the use of a copy lacks certain advantage, but this defect is no greater than in the ordinary instance of a contract or a deed which cannot be produced, nor is the importance of using the original here any greater" Wignmore § 719. Thus a sale was allowed to be proved by a clerk who refreshed his memory from a ledger, copied under his supervision from a waste book kept by himself Burton v Plummer, 2 A & E 341. A surveyor has been allowed to refer to a printed copy of a written report made by him to his employers, which latter was substantially but not literally transcribed from rough notes taken by him at the time Horne v Mackenzie 6 C & F 628, contra, Murray v Mason 18 Ir R L R 8, Plup Ev p 416. The question whether secondary evidence was in any given case rightly admitted is one which is proper to be decided by the Judge of the first instance and is treated as depending very much on his discretion. His conclusion should not be overruled except, in a very clear case of miscarriage Angava v Ramappa 1 Bom L R 703=28 B 94. Where the plants in suits upon bonds by the same plaintiff having been destroyed by fire, while under the Court's custody through no fault of the plaintiff, suits were re-instituted upon duplicate copies of the plants prepared from a register containing particulars of the lost bonds held that the register though it might not be secondary evidence of the contents of the bonds was a document that might be used for refreshing a witness's memory under s. 159 of the Evidence Act. Fauzel Nath v Jeemat Nasya, 5 C 453. A copy of the statement of injuries recorded in the register of medical legal cases may be used by the medical witness for the purpose of refreshing his memory but it cannot be treated as evidence Mahomed v Emperor A I R 1926 Loh 51.

S 159.

Expert In all cases where skilled witnesses are called to pronounce their opinions on some scientific question they may refresh their memory by referring to professional treatises, tables, calculations lists of prices and the like. For instance an attorney might refer to 'the Carlisle Table' when called upon to give evidence respecting the value of an annuity on joint lives (Rouley v N W Ry Co, 42 L J Ex 153), and an architect might, it is presumed, refresh his memory with any price list of generally acknowledged correctness. So, although medical books are not directly admissible in evidence, no good reason can be given, why a physician should not be allowed to strengthen his recollection by referring to such as he considers to be works of authority or why he should not be asked, after such a reference, whether his judgment was or was not thereby confirmed Taylor § 1422.

Statement reduced to writing by police officer A statement reduced to writing by a police officer under s. 162, Criminal Pro Code cannot have the effect of a deposition, but though it is not evidence to the police officer, to whom it was made, may use it to refresh his memory under s. 159 of the Evidence Act, and may be cross-examined upon it by the counsel against whose case the testimony aided by it has been given Queen Empress v Sitaram 11 B 657 see also Reg v Ullamchand, 11 B H C R 120, Crown v Baloch, 4 S L R 38 Cr = 7 Ind Cas 38=14 Cr L J 498, R v Ismail, 11 B 659, Rogham v R, 9 C 455. Documents wherein statements of persons examined by a police officer during an investigation have been under s. 119 of the Cr Pro Code reduced to writing, may be used to refresh such police officer's memory, when giving evidence but the documents themselves cannot be used as evidence in being read out to a jury to point out discrepancies Rogham Singh v Emperor 9 C 155=11 C L R 569, R v Stewart, 31 C 1050. A witness is not entitled to insist upon a police officer refreshing his memory, during his examination in Court, by referring to certain notes prepared by such officer under s. 119 of the Code. In the matter of the petition of Kali Churn Churni, 8 C 151=10 C L R 51.

Confession A Magistrate who took down a confession, may while being examined as a witness, be allowed, under s. 159 or s. 160 Evidence Act, to refresh his memory by referring to his record of that confession Emperor v Chaitu Gahera, 16 C P L R. 122.

Special diaries A criminal Court may permit the police officer, who made the special diary, to look at it for the purpose of contradicting such police officer. Where the Police officer does look at it in entry in the diary for the

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

160 purpose of refreshing his memory, the provisions of section 161 of the Evidence Act apply and the accused or his agent is entitled to see such diary and to cross examine such police officer thereon. A special diary cannot be used to enable any witness other than the Police officer who made it to refresh his memory by looking at it and it cannot be used to contradict any witness other than such Police officer. It is the Court which is entitled to use the special diaries for the purpose of seeking for sources and times of enquiry, and for the names of persons who may be in a position to give material evidence. Neither the accused nor his agent is entitled to see the special diary for any purpose, unless it has been used by the Court for enabling the Police officer who made it to refresh his memory for the purpose of contradicting him. In no case is it to refresh his memory for the purpose of enabling him to give material evidence. This right is limited to that of inspection in certain cases. Queen Empress v. Mannu 19 A 390 (F B) = A W N 1897, 14

Arbitration proceeding. A witness who is present at an arbitration, and had compiled the draft and four copy minutes made by the clerk and found the latter to be correct, was allowed to refresh his memory as to what occurred at the arbitration, by reference to the four copy minutes made by arbitrator's clerk. Astarmee Dass v. Aundo Lal Dass, 5 C W N XVI

Police diary. If, upon the question being asked of a witness there is a lapse of memory, on his part and that failure of memory can be remedied by reference to any memorandum or other writing prepared by the witness at the time and the Court invites the witness to refresh his memory with reference to the writing, the witness is under an obligation to do so, it being his duty to lay the whole truth before the Court to the best of his ability. Harsh v. Emperor 19 A L J 76

160 A witness may also testify to facts mentioned in section 159, although he has no specific recollection of the facts themselves, if he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the document

Illustration

A book keeper may testify to facts recorded by him in books regularly kept in the course of business, if he knows that the books were correctly kept, although he has forgotten the particular transactions entered.

Scope of section 160.—Past recollection. The record (memorandum note, entry etc.) must have been made at or about the time of the event recorded. Whether in a given case it was made so near that the recollection may be assumed to have been then sufficiently fresh must depend on the circumstances of the case. Anderson v. Whally 3 C & K 54. The witness need not have made the record himself. Burrough v. Martin 2 Camp 560 R v. Philpotts, 5 Cox Cr 329 R v. Langton L R 2 Q B D 298. The essential thing is that he should be able to guarantee that the record actually represented his recollection at the time and this he may be able to do, either by virtue of his general custom in making such records or (as in the common case of an attesting witness) by his assurance that he would not have made the record if he had not believed it correct. Pearson v. Wrightman 1 Mills Court 344, Manstam v. Hubbard 2 M & R 5 R v. St Martin 2 A & E 210. The original record should be produced, not a copy. Doe v. Perkins 3 T R 754. Lord Falbot v. Macleazie 5 Cl & F 623. Topham v. Mc Giegar, 1 C & K 320. The original record should be produced, not a copy. Since the process of making a copy of it is a distinct thing from the process of making the original record, there is no reason why the copy may not be one made by another person, if properly proved by the other person on the stand. This being so why is not a copy receivable of a report originally oral? The situation is the same, except that the salesman, workman, etc., instead of handing the book keeper, clerk, etc., a written statement of the transaction, makes an oral statement, which is transcribed, and in effect represents the first person's recollection as orally reported by him. The joint testimony of the two ought to be receivable on principle, and such is the result generally reached by the Courts, though usually the reports are required to have been made in the regular course of business. Green v. Ev § 439(b). When a written record brings to the mind of a witness neither any recollection of the facts mentioned in it nor any recollection of the writing itself but which nevertheless enables him to swear to a particular fact from the conviction of his mind on seeing the writing which he knows to be genuine, the witness may be allowed to refresh his memory by looking at the record. Abdul Salam v. Emperor 49 C 573=35 C L J 279=26 C W N 680=69 Ind Cis 145=23 Cr L J 657. The meaning of the expression "if he is sure that the facts, etc." is that the witness must satisfy the Court, with reference to ordinary probabilities, of his right to be sure that the record relied on by him is correct. Yesudayan v. Subba Naicker, 52 Ind Cis 704. In a suit for damages for negligence in supervising a building an Engineer's Report is admissible to prove quantity of damages, provided the Engineer makes the contents of the report a part of his deposition by using it to refresh his memory. Nagendranath v. Nagenbha Bala, 43 C L J 479=97 Ind Cas 200=A I R 1926 Cal. 938.

Difference between section 159 and section 160 Under section 159 of the Indian Evidence Act, it is not necessary that the witness must be sure, that what was reduced to writing by him is a correct record. It is enough if, on reading it, the true facts are recalled to his memory. But if he does not actually recollect himself what the appellant said if the words are not called to his memory, then the notes may be admitted under s 160 of the Evidence Act, if he is sure that the facts are correctly recorded in the notes. If the words have not been correctly recorded but only the writer's impressions of those words are recorded, then the notes will be inadmissible under s 160 of the Evidence Act. In re Mylapore Krishnaswami, 5 M L T 393=9 Cr L J 456=32 M 331=2 Ind Cas 33.

161 Any writing referred to under the provisions of the two last preceding sections must be produced and shown to the adverse party if he requires it such party may, if he pleases, cross-examine the witness thereupon.

Right of adverse party as to writing used to refresh memory Principle The fundamental purpose of the rule requiring the use of the original is to protect against error and to give the opponent an opportunity to verify the exact nature of the document and to ascertain its value. Even where a copy is permitted, there is still a need in fairness or fairness for the opponent to see the document in order to prepare, to test the witness upon its contents. Thus it is a necessary implication that the document used, whether an original or a copy, when produced in Court, shall be shown to the opponent on his request, to inspect and to use in cross-examination. In R v. St Martin, 2 A & E 210, Patteson J said "If he could not recollect the facts independently of the writing, the original writing ought to have been in Court in order that the other party might cross examine, not that such writing is to be made evidence itself, but that the other party is to have the benefit of the witness refreshing his memory in every part." "If the witness cannot be compelled to produce it, he might use documents made for him by the party calling him of the accuracy of which he knows nothing. The right of a party to protection against the introduction against him of false, forged, or manufactured evidence, which he is not permitted to inspect, must not be invaded a hure breadth." Mullin J in Tibbels v. Sterbery, 66 Barb 201.

Scope of the section In all cases where documents are used for the purpose of refreshing the memory of a witness, it is usual and reasonable,—and

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

- S 161. if the witness has no independent recollection of the fact, it is necessary,—that they should be produced at the trial and that the opposite counsel should have an opportunity of inspecting them, in order that in cross or re examination, he may have the benefit of the witness's refreshing his memory by every part. Neither is the adverse party bound to put the document in, as part of his evidence, merely because he has looked at it or examined the witness respecting such entries as have been previously referred to, but if he goes further than this, and asks questions as to other parts of the memorandum, it seems, that he thereby makes it his own evidence. Paylor § 141. The grounds upon which the opposite party is permitted to inspect a writing are (1) to secure the full benefit of the witness's recollection as to the whole of the facts, (2) to check the use of improper documents and (3) to compare his oral testimony with the written statement. The opposite party may look at the writing to see what kind of writing it is in order to check the use of improper document, but it is doubtful whether he is entitled except for this particular purpose, to question the witness as to other and independent matters contained in the same writing. In re Shubboo Mahlan 8 C 739 745. A pyatpaing or the outer foil of Land Records Register IX not signed by the person making the report of the memorandum to which it refers is not admissible in evidence to prove the report. It does not become a written report unless signed by the person making the report. But when the official making the entry gives oral evidence about the oral report he can refresh his memory by referring to pyatpaing. When used in that way the entry becomes evidence within the definition of the term in section 3 of the Evidence Act and should be placed on the record. Ma Dun v Lee O, 5 L B R 40=2 Ind Cis 535

The question sometimes arises whether memoranda used to refresh the memory, are themselves to be admitted in evidence. Of course the memoranda under discussion in this chapter must not be confused with such writings as books of account which on grounds elsewhere discussed, are competent as evidence when properly verified. When the witness, after examining the memorandum finds his memory so refreshed that he can testify from recollection independently of the memorandum there is no reason or necessity for the introduction of the paper or writing itself and it is not admissible. In such case the jury have no knowledge of the contents of the paper, unless opposing counsel calls for such contents for cross-examination. Of course the cross-examiner has the right to inspect and use the document in order that he may test the candour and credibility of the witness and to show that it could not properly refresh his memory. Durr Jones § 883. It is almost needless to add that a statement prepared by the witness cannot be used as evidence of the facts therein set forth. Thus in a personal injury action a statement by the doctor of the condition of the plaintiff at the time of his attendance referred to in his deposition is an accurate description of the matters therein set forth, was in admissible as evidence. Although it is clear that the document is not admissible as evidence when it sorecalls the facts to the mind of the witness that he remembers them and can testify from his actual recollection it has frequently been held that another rule prevails when the witness, after examining the memorandum, cannot testify to an existing knowledge of the fact, independently of the memorandum but can testify that, at or about the time the writing was made, he knows of its contents and of its truth or accuracy. In such cases, both the testimony of the witness and the contents of the memorandum are held admissible. The two are the equivalent of a present positive statement of the witness, affirming the truth of the contents of the memorandum. Hancock v Kelley 81 Alr 356. There are many every day transactions in commercial establishments which after a little time could not be otherwise proved. "It is not to be supposed that officers and clerks in large trading and other establishments can call to mind all that has been done in the course of their employment, and when their original entries and memoranda have been duly authenticated and there is nothing to excite suspicion there can be no greater danger in allowing them to be read before the jury. Monroe Bond v Chelver 2 Hill (N Y) 531. But where the witness testifies fully as to all the matters in the memorandum, its rejection is not error. If the witness neither recollects the facts nor remembers to have recognized the writing as true while the facts were fresh in his memory, then the paper is nothing more than Hearsay, and is incompetent evidence Bondurant v State Bank, 7 Ala 830, Burr Jones § 883

§ 162

No oral statements of witnesses should be recorded in the "special" diary kept by a police officer under s 172 of the Criminal Procedure. Whether incorporated or not, in the special diary records of statements of witnesses taken by the police falls under s 162 Criminal Procedure Code, and are liable to be produced but only under the conditions laid down under that section, i.e. the accused may at the time the witness appears before the Court, ask the Court to refer to them, and the Court may, if it thinks expedient, in the ends of justice, furnish him with copies of such statements for the purpose of impeaching the credit of the witness. But the police officer who recorded the statements, cannot be cross-examined under s 145 or s. 161 of the Evidence Act with regard to such statements, such examination being allowable only with regard to the entries properly recorded in the diary kept under section 172 Criminal Procedure Code, if the police officer refers to such entries for the purpose of refreshing his memories Dadan Gazi v Emperor, 33 C 1023=10 C W N 890=4 Cr L J 79

162 A witness summoned to produce a document shall,

Production of documents if it is in his possession or power, bring it to Court, notwithstanding any objection which there may be to its production or to its admissibility. The validity of any such objection shall be decided on by the Court

The Court, if it sees fit, may inspect the document, unless it refers to matters of State, or take other evidence to enable it to determine on its admissibility

If for such a purpose it is necessary to cause any document to be translated, the Court may, if it thinks fit, direct the translator to keep the contents secret, unless the document is to be given in evidence and, if the interpreter disobeys such direction, he shall be held to have committed an offence under section 166 of the Indian Penal Code

Scope of the section If the person is required to produce a document he is served with a subpoena duces tecum. A subpoena duces tecum ought to specify the documents required, and the Court will not enforce a subpoena which is too general, but if a person served with a subpoena admits that he has the documents required with him he must produce them Lee v Angus L R 2 Eq 59 Re Emma Silver Mining Co L R 10 Ch 191. A sealed packet may be a document and therefore liable to production under the subpoena R v Daye (1903) 2 K B 333. A witness who is merely called to produce a document need not be sworn, and in that case he cannot be cross-examined Wood v MacInson, 2 M & R 273, Corl 191. But he may be asked what documents he has with him, and he is bound to answer the question without being sworn and produce the documents. The witness produces the document to the Court and not to the parties and the Court decides whether it is to be used or not. The witness can, of course, take any legal objection to producing the documents Powell Ev 653, see also Pickering v Noyes 1 B & C 262. If he objects he is to state the grounds of his objection Griffith v Rickells, 7 H 299. If he does not attend on such a subpoena or attends and refuses to produce the writing on any other ground but that of privilege secondary evidence will not be admissible, but the witness will be punishable for contempt R v Llanfaethly, 2 E & B 940. A person cannot, of course be compelled by

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

- § 162. subpoena to produce documents not in his possession or under his control Thus a secretary of a company served with a subpoena to produce the books of the company was held not to have disobeyed the subpoena by not producing the books, they having been removed from him since the service of the subpoena by the board of directors of the company R v Stuart 2 F L R 141, Powell 634 Any person summoned merely to produce a document shall be deemed to have complied with the summons if he causes such document to be produced instead of attending personally to produce it Civil Procedure Code, Order XVI, rule 6

An order cannot be made for the inspection of the books of persons not parties to the action [Starke v Reynolds, (1880) 22 Q B D 262] although such persons may be ordered to attend and produce them before the Court or Judge or examiner Re Smith Williams v Frere, (1891) 1 Ch 323 Section 123 makes the production of evidence as to unpublished official records of affairs of State entirely dependent upon the discretion of the head of the department concerned It is therefore unnecessary for the Judge to have the right to inspect any document of this character but he may inspect a document which falls under section 130 or 131 in order to judge of its admissibility The person in custody of what he considers a privileged State document should bring it with him to Court to be prepared for the Court deciding that it is not so, but there is no necessity is in England for him to state that he objects to the production on the grounds of public policy Aam v Farrow 37 L F R N 5 469 The Head of the department can give or withhold his permission as he thinks fit Vide s 123 The proviso to this section expressly precludes the Court from even inspecting documents referring to matters of State Nort Ev 340

If a person has the document in his actual legal possession he must produce it on summons though the legal custody belongs to a third person But documents in a public office are not in the possession of the clerk as to justify his bringing them into Court Nort Ev 340 A subpoena asking all documents relating to the questions in issue or documents relating to the case if he has any is not enforceable Lee v Angus, L R 2 Eq 59, Re Emma Silver Mining Co L R 10 Ch 194, Buchard v McFarlane, (1891) 2 Q B 241 (247) The subpoena should not be oppressive Steele v Satorn, 8 L R 94 This subpoena is incidental to the power of Courts and necessary to the due administration of justice Amev v Long 9 East 473 It is a writ of compulsory obligation which the witness must obey like all other subpoenas He has no more right to determine whether the documents shall be produced than whether he shall appear as a witness It is his duty to attend and to bring with him the documents according to exigency of the writ Doe v Kelly 4 Dowd 273 Reg v Russell 7 Dowd 693 It is for the Court to determine whether they should be produced and exhibited Amev v Long 9 East 473, Reg v Daxon, 3 Burr 1687 Thus the Court will determine whether the documents should be withheld is evidence on the ground that they will deprive the witness of his title, charge (United States v Reynolds 6 Pat 352 Walters v Wood, 3 Launt 11), or whether the document is in the nature of a confidential communication to an attorney (Reg v Daxon 3 Burr 1687 Copeland v Watts, 1 Stark 95 Bustros v White 1 Q B D 123 Lynch v Kennedy 27 Ch D 1 vide ss 126, 127), or whether his excuse for not producing the same is valid or reasonable Bull v Loveland 10 Pick (Mass) 9, Burr Jones § 601

In a case where an attorney claimed the protection of his lien, the Court said The exemption to the general rule of production seems to me a reasonable one. If an attorney's lien on his client's papers should not be permitted to embarrass a third person in no way liable for the debt is reasonable but, if an attorney's lien upon his client's papers amounts to anything I think he may assert it as a subpoena duces tecum The value of the lien often lies almost altogether in the power to withhold the papers from use as evidence and that the debtor client should be allowed by a subpoena duces tecum to make practically worthless his creditor's lien seems to me unjust Davis v Diers 90 Fed 791 see also Hays v Luddell, 7 De G M & E 331, In re Cameron & Coolbrook, etc R Co 25 Barv 1, Brassington v Brassington, 1 Sim

& S 155, Kemp v Amy, 2 Moody & R 437 So a Court will punish the witness for his failure or refusal to produce documents, if properly subpoenaed in case he has no excuse for such failure or refusal Vide s 175 of the Indian Penal Code, R v Daye, (1903) 2 K B 333 A subpoena duces tecum is only to be employed to secure the production of books and papers that are to be introduced in evidence in the trial of an action, it is not to be used to secure papers to refresh the memory of a witness It cannot be used for the production of things Burr Jones § 801

The fact that the documents are in the possession of a corporation does not prevent their production A corporation has no right to withhold papers which a private individual would have to produce In cases of diplomatic officers, ambassadors and consuls, a subpoena will not be issued for the production of their official papers Burr Jones § 802

Where the witness declines to produce an instrument on the ground of professional confidence the Judge should not inspect it to see whether it was one which he ought to withhold (Doc d Carter v James 2 M & Rob 47, Volant v Soyer, 13 C B 231=23 L J C P 83), and it seems that the mere assertion on oath by the solicitor that it is a title-deed or other privileged document, is conclusive Roscoe N P 153 If the document be brought into Court by a witness who says that he is instructed by the owner to object to the production of it, this is enough to justify secondary proof without subpoenaing the owner himself to make the objection in person Phelps v Preu, 3 E & B 430=23 L J Q B 140 It seems to be sufficient if one only of several interested parties objects Per Maule J in Newton v Chaplin, 19 L J C P 374, Keasley v Philips, 10 Q B D 465 When the production is excused, secondary evidence is admissible Marston v Downes, 1 Ad & E 31, Dos d Gilbert v Ross, 7 M & W 102, Roscoe N P 1585

If a Court decides to summon a government official for the production of certain documents it should only do so after careful consideration and once the summons had been issued, productions should ordinarily be insisted on if the party who obtained the summons so desires Lazman Rao v Vithoba, 45 Ind Cas 398

Statements made before the Income Tax Collector do not relate to affairs of state and so are not governed by s 123 of the Evidence Act The Income Tax Collector, summoned to produce, is bound to produce the books in his possession, in spite of the rules made under s 33 of the Income Tax Act forbidding disclosure Under s 162 of the Evidence Act a witness should not decline to bring documents into Court on the ground of privilege Under the same section the Court has power to inspect the documents for the purposes of deciding objections regarding production or admissibility The provision relating to the non disclosure of information given or obtained "in official confidence" does not apply to the production of documents in a Court of justice Venkatachella v Sampathu, 4 M L T 317=32 M 62=19 M L J 263= 1 Ind Cas 705 The inspection of an official document of which privilege is claimed is entirely within the trial Court's discretion under this section and its refusal to inspect them is not an improper exercise of discretion Agaraya v Vythanatha, (1911) 2 M W N 369

163 When a party calls for a document which he has given the other party notice to produce, and such document is produced and inspected by the party calling for its production he is bound to give it as evidence if the party producing it requires him to do so

Giving as evidence of document called for and produced on notice

Principle. The production of papers upon notice does not make them evidence in the cause, unless the party calling for them inspects them so as to become acquainted with their contents in which case he is obliged to use them as his evidence (Calvert v Foulke 7 C & P 336, Wharam v Routledge 5 Esp 235 per Lord Ellenborough), at least if they be in any way material to the issue Wilson v Bouie, 1 C & P 10, Sayer v Kitchen, 1 Esp 210,

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

Taylor § 1817 The reason for this rule is, that it would give an unconscionable advantage to a party to enable him to pry into the affairs of his adversary, without at the same time subjecting him to the risk of whatever he inspects evinces of both parties. Taylor § 1817 Green L. § 563 "A party who gives notice to produce a paper in evidence must be supposed to know its contents. If he does not he ought not to be permitted to speculate through the forms of law and obtain from his adversary the inspection of any paper or document he may choose to demand. Such a privilege could be liable to abuse." Radcliffe J in Lawrence v Vai Hoine, 1 Camm 276, 285, Wigmore § 2125

Scope of the section. The mere calling for the documents from the opposite party is not enough to make them evidence. But when the party calling for the document inspects them he is bound to give it as evidence if the party producing it requires him to do so. Burr Jones § 226 If the party giving the notice declines to use the papers when produced this though matter of observation will not make them evidence for the adverse party. Sayer v Kitchen 1 Esp 210 But it is otherwise if the papers are used or inspected by the party calling for them and are material to the issues. Wilson v Bouie 1 C & P 10 Cheslet v Fowler, 7 C & P 386, Wharam v Routledge 5 Esp 235, Roscoe v P. E. 13 Inspection by a party includes inspection by an agent as well as personally. Norrey v Keep (1909) 1 Ch 557 565 This section is intended to prevent the somewhat undignified squabbling which frequently takes place in England, as to whether a document which the other party has received notice to produce should be put in. Man' Et p 113 In Cheslet v Fowler 7 C & P 386, the documents called for were books of account. In that case counsel turned over several pages so as to look at the contents of them and Loid Denham C J said counsel could not do this and then not use the papers or books. In Wharam v Routledge, supra Loid Ellenborough said You cannot ask for a book of the opposite party and be determined upon the inspection of it whether you will use it or not. If you call for it you make it evidence for the other side if he think fit to use it. In Wilson v Fowler 7 C & P 386, the plaintiff's counsel called for a paper and it does not bear on the case he need not read it. This paper is of the latter kind and the plaintiff's counsel may go on without reading the paper or calling the subscribing witness. This implies that the party calling for a paper must prove it. So where a party to a case calls for a document from the other party and inspects the same under s. 163 of the Evidence Act 1872 he takes the risk of making it evidence for both parties. Mahomed Ali v Abdul Rahman 5 Bom L R 380 Under this section it is the duty of the plaintiff to require the defendant who has taken inspection to tender the account books as evidence of both parties. Such account books need no further proof and are admissible in toto. Ashkan Ghule v Paransa 106 Ind Cis 305-A I R 1928 Nag 119 There is no authority for the proposition that evidence which is admitted under the special provisions of this section must be deemed to be conclusive evidence against the party who has inspected the documents. There is certainly nothing in the language of this section to justify such a conclusion. All that happens is that the documents which the other party has produced become evidence in the case for which they are wanted. Ram Dhan v Ram Dayal 23 O C 156-57 Ind Cis 923 In a pending trial the defendant produced certain account books and gave inspection of the same to the plaintiff on his request. The plaintiff however did not admit the genuineness of those accounts. The Court admitted the documents in evidence without proof and asked the plaintiff to adduce rebutting evidence if any. Held that the procedure of the lower Court was not justified by s. 163 of the Evidence Act. Section 163 does not render it a proof of the document to be admitted unnecessary or after the normal incidence of that burden. It is doubtful whether section 163 of the Evidence Act is applicable to accounts produced under the procedure for discovery or only to accounts produced after the trial has begun. Iya Gopal v Ramnagar, 1923 W W A 292-72 Ind Cis 429-1923 Ind 607-18 L W 165 Application of this section is not restricted to civil proceedings only. It is applicable also to criminal trials and even though the Crown is the prosecutor. Where therefore, notice to produce statements made to a Magistrate during departmental enquiries is given to the Crown by the defence and such statements are produced, inspected and used for cross examination of several witnesses the Crown is entitled to have the whole of the statement as evidence. Departmental enquiry by a Magistrate in his executive capacity is not judicial enquiry and statements recorded therein is not evidence taken on oath. Such statements therefore are not public documents, and section 163 can be applied to such statements. Government of Bengal v Santiam Mandal, A I R 1930 Cal 370.

S 164
S 165

164 When a party refuses to produce a document which he has had notice to produce, he cannot afterwards use the document as evidence without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court.

Using as evidence of document production of which was refused on notice

Illustration

A sues B on an agreement and gives B notice to produce it. At the trial A calls for the document and B refuses to produce it. A gives secondary evidence of its contents. B seeks to produce the document itself to contradict the secondary evidence given by A, or in order to show that the agreement is not stamped. He cannot do so.

Principle Where an opponent in possession refuses to produce on demand he is afterwards forbidden to produce the document in order to contradict the other party's copy or evidence of its contents. This is in one sense a proper penalty for unfair tactics but the original refusal may also be regarded as a judicial admission in advance, of the correctness of the first party's evidence to this extent. Wignore § 1210. In Doe v Cozell 6 C & P 525 528 Alderson B said 'You must either produce a document when it is called for or never.' See also Lewis v Hartley, 7 C & P 407, Doe v Hodgson, 12 A & E 135.

Scope of the section If the opponent having a document in his possession refuses to produce it when called upon at the hearing to do so he is not at liberty afterwards to give the document in evidence for any purpose. Doe v Hodgson, 12 A & E 135. Collins v Gashon 2 F & F 47. Since it is generally to the interest of a party against whom a document is intended to be adduced that his opponent should have no opportunity of mistaking its terms, and the refusal to comply with the notice to produce a document in his possession has the effect of letting in secondary evidence such notice is generally effected to insure the production of the document. Willis & 2nd Ed 361. If he once refuses he cannot when his opponent has proved a copy, and is about to have it read, produce the original, and object to its admissibility without the evidence of an attesting witness. Edmonds v Challis, 7 Com B 413 439, Jackson v Allen, 4 Stark R 74. Neither, after such refusal, will he be permitted to put the document into the hands of his opponent's witness for the purpose of cross examination (Doe v Cozell 6 C & P 527 528) or to produce and prove it as part of his own case. Doe v Hodgson, 12 A & E 135. He is not entitled to show that there are attesting witnesses who should be called (Jackson v Allen, 3 Stark 71, Edmonds v Challis 7 C B 134), or to refresh the memory of a witness (Till v Insworth Bristol 1874, Wilde G J W S), or it seems for any purpose (Collins v Gordon 2 F & F 47, Byles J). He is, in effect, bound, by any legal and satisfactory evidence produced on the other side. Rosecoe V P Ed 13. Shoolram v Ram Lal, 9 W R C R 213, Nort Pt 252.

165 The Judge may, in order to discover or to obtain

Judge's power to put questions or order production proper proof of relevant facts, ask any question he pleases, in any form, at any time, of any witness, or of the parties

S 165. about any fact relevant or irrelevant, and may order the production of any document or thing, and neither the parties nor their agents shall be entitled to make any objection to any such question or order, nor without the leave of the Court, to cross-examine any witness upon any answer given in reply to any such question.

Provided that the judgment must be based upon facts declared by this Act to be relevant, and duly proved.

Provided also that this section shall not authorize any Judge to compel any witness to answer any question, or to produce any document which such witness would be entitled to refuse to answer or produce under sections 121 to 131, both inclusive if the question were asked or the document were called for by the adverse party, nor shall the Judge ask any question which it would be improper for any other person to ask under section 148 or 149, nor shall he dispense with primary evidence of any document, except in the cases hereinbefore excepted.

Principle 'Section 165 is intended to arm the Judge with the most extensive power possible for the purpose of getting at the truth. The effect of this section, is that in order to get to the bottom of the matter before it the Court will be able to look at and enquire into every fact whatever.' Steph Intro Ev Act p 162. 'We know of no limit' says Lumplin J in Epps v State, 19 Ga 118 (Am) to the right which belongs to the Court of interrogating witnesses, either in civil or criminal cases, especially the latter. The life or death of a man may hang upon a full development of the truth. The presumption that this liberty will not be honourably and impartially exercised is not to be tolerated for a moment. When they see therefore that a material fact has been omitted which ought to have been brought out, it is not only right but the duty of the presiding Judge to call the attention of the witness to it, whether it makes for or against the prosecution his aim being neither to punish the innocent or screen the guilty, but to administer the law correctly.'

English rule The sporting theory of the common law in which litigation was a game of skill to be conducted according to the specific rules and to be decided by the combined effects of skill strength and luck tended to place the Judge primarily in the position of the umpire of a game whose duty it was to interfere only so far as needed to decide whether the rules of the game had been violated. This tendency never dominated (so far as the Judge's functions were concerned), in the orthodox English practice the Judge there has never ceased to perform an active and virile part as a director of the proceedings and as an administrator of justice. One of the natural parts of the judicial function in its orthodox and sound recognition, is the Judge's power and duty to put to witnesses such additional questions as seem to him desirable to elicit the truth more fully. This just exercise of his function was never doubted at common law the Judge could even call a new witness of his own motion and could seek evidence to inform himself judicially, much more could he ask additional questions of a witness already called but imperfectly examined. Fortunately in spite of the strong but subtle tendency to force the purely judicial function into the back ground, the tradition of the common law has never been lost the right of the Judge to interrogate as he thinks best has always been preserved in theory. Wigmore § 781. So under the English law a Judge has always discretionary power with which the Court above is very unwilling to interfere (Middleton v Barrett, 4 Ex R. 213 Per Parke B) of recalling witnesses at any stage of the trial, and of putting such legal questions to them as the exigencies of justice require R v Watson, 6 C & P 653 Taylor § 1477 So a judge may put all such questions to a witness as the interests of justice require (R v Remnant, R & R 836 R v Watson 6 C & P 613, R v Jameson, Times, July 24, 1896), and the questions may be based not only on matters arising in the case but on his own local or scientific knowledge (R v Autrum, 21 R 603, Shott v Robinson, 63 J P 290) So the jury may ask admissible though not inadmissible questions R v Lillyman, (1896) 2 Q B 167, 177, Phil Ev 151 So Mr Edmund Burke in arguing in Mr Warren Hastings's Trial said 'It is the duty of the Judge to receive any offer of evidence apparently material, suggested to him, though the parties themselves through negligence, ignorance or corrupt collusion, should not bring it forward. He has a duty of his own, independent of them, and that duty is to investigate the truth. If no prosecutor appears (and it has happened more than once), the Court is obliged, through its officer the clerk of the arraigns, to examine and cross-examine every witness who presents himself, and the Judge is to see it done effectively, and to act his own part in it' Report of Committee on Warren Hastings's Trial, 31 Part Hist 318

Scope of the Section It seems to be the general rule, well supported by the decided cases, that the trial Judge has the right to propound such questions to witnesses as may be necessary in order to elicit pertinent facts, in order that the truth may be established Barr Jones § 81. A Judge presiding at a trial is not a mere moderator between contending parties, he is a sworn officer charged with grave public duties. In order to establish justice and maintain truth and prevent wrong, he has a large discretion in the application of rules of practice. There is nothing wrong in the Court's asking the witness any question the answer to which would likely throw any light upon the testimony Per Duell CC in Hoffman v Cagle 86 Ind 591, 596 (Am) In Bartley v State, 55 Nebr 294=75 N W 832, Harrison C J said 'It is undoubtedly necessary that the Judge who presides should acquire as full a knowledge of the facts and circumstances of the case on trial as possible, in order that he may instruct the jury, and correctly, to the extent his duty demands, shape the determination of the litigated matters, that justice may not miscarry, but may prevail, and doubtless it is allowable at times, and under some circumstances, for the presiding Judge to interrogate a witness. The exact extent or (times) when the exigencies may warrant an exercise of this right are matters which are not capable of very precise statement, but it may be said that the right here in question is one which should be very sparingly exercised, and, generally counsel for the parties should be relied on and allowed to manage and bring out their own case. The notions of the Judge in this respect should never be such as to warrant any assertion that they were with a view to assistance of the one or the other party to the cause' Wignore § 781

As regards the inclusion of this section in the Indian Evidence Act Sir James Fitzjames Stephen in his speech said 'Passing however from the case of English Barristers to the case of pleaders and vilds, and the Courts before which they practice, I would appeal to every one who has experience of the subject, whether the observations referred to are not strictly true and whether the main provision founded upon them—the provision which empowers the Court to ask what question it pleases—is not essential to the administration of justice here. In saying that the Bench and the Bar in England play their respective parts independently, what I mean is that, in England, cases are fully prepared for trial before they come into Court so that the Judge has nothing to do but to sit still and weigh the evidence produced before him. In India in an enormous mass of cases, this neither is nor can be so. It is absolutely necessary that the Judge should not only hear what is put before him by others, but that he should ascertain by his own inquiries how the facts actually stand. In order to do this it will frequently be necessary for him to go into matters which are not themselves relevant to the matter in issue, but may lead to something that is, and it is in order to arm Judges with express authority to do this that section 165 which has been so much objected to has been framed' Speech of the Honble Fitzjames Stephen on the 12th March 1872, in submitting the Report of the Committee to the Council"

S. 165.

"We come next to the Judge's power" says Mr Justice Cunningham 'to ask questions. It frequently happens that the parties do not in their questions elicit all the facts necessary to a good view of the merits of the case. A plaintiff may have some weak points in his case which he is afraid of betraying and so dexterously avoids, or a defendant may fail to perceive the import of some answer given and allow it to pass uncriticized in any such case it is highly important that the Judge should be armed with full power enabling him to get at the facts. He may, accordingly, subject to conditions to be immediately noticed, ask any question he pleases in any form at any stage of the proceedings about any matter relevant or irrelevant, and he may order the production of any document or thing. No objection can be taken to any such question or order, nor are the parties entitled, without the Court's permission, to cross-examine on the answers given. This general power, however, is very clearly restricted. In the first place the question must be based on relevant facts, and those relevant facts must have been duly proved, next the Judge cannot compel a witness to answer any question or to produce any document which he would be entitled to refuse to answer or produce at the instance of the opposite party nor may the Judge ask any of the questions as to credit which would be improper if asked by the adverse party nor can he dispense with primary evidence of a document unless the facts of the case show that secondary evidence is admissible. A Judge, accordingly, cannot by the exercise of the powers conferred by this section impart into the decision of the case any fact which is not relevant under the Act, nor can he in any case dispense with the prescribed mode of proof, or ask questions to credit except such is would be permitted if asked by the parties. Thus restricted, the power of asking questions is of obvious utility in a country like India, where in the vast majority of cases no advocate is employed but the Judge has to make out the truth as best he can from the confused, inaccurate and often intentionally false accounts of ignorant, excited and mendacious witness.' Cum Fe 70

'A Judge may ask any questions in any form, at any stage of the cause, and to a certain extent even allow parties or their advocates to do so. This, however, does not mean that he can receive illegal evidence at pleasure, for if such be left to the jury, a new trial may be granted, even though the evidence were extracted by questions put from the Bench, but it is a power necessary to prevent justice being defeated by technicality to secure indicative evidence, and in criminal cases to assist in fixing the amount of punishment. Best Ev § 86. So it is within the power of the Court to propound pertinent and properly framed questions to a witness. The exercise of the power if the questions propounded by the Court are directed to crucial points of the case, is most likely to arouse the serious apprehension of the one or the other of the parties and certainly places counsels in a situation of great embarrassment if they conceive a question asked by the Court as leading and suggestive in form or improper for any cause.

It is believed the instances are rare and the conditions exceptional in a high degree which will justify the presiding Judge in entering upon and conducting an exhausted examination of a witness and the exercise of a sound discretion will seldom deem such action necessary or advisable. Dun v People, 173 Ill 582, 595. 'Therefore whenever in his judgment the proceeding is not being conducted in a way to accomplish the purpose for which alone it is instituted the full development of the truth or whenever he can effect a better accomplishment of that purpose he not only has the right but it is his duty to take part. The Judge should not place himself in the attitude of helping or hurting either side, but whenever it appears to him proper he should fearlessly endeavour to develop the truth with all possible clearness and certainty whichever side the truth may help or hurt. The Judge will always have a personality of his own which he cannot disguise or conceal. But the only fact he can display is sincerity, and so long as he is sincere he need feel no timidity in the discharge of his public duty because of the possible tone or inflection of his voice or the play of his features. It is natural that able and masterful attorneys should be intolerant and resentful of any participation by the Judge in the examination and cross-examination of witnesses.' Burch J in State v Keelu 85 Kan 763, Higmore § 781.

Of course, the examination by the Judge must be done in a reasonable and impartial way so as not to indicate his opinion of the facts and thereby prejudice the rights of the parties. His questions should be propounded, not to support the case of either litigant, but with the sole desire to elicit and bring out the truth that justice may require. Having in fact no feeling for or against either party, it should not be difficult for him to refrain from exhibiting such feeling. It is the primary duty of the parties to bring out their own evidence. But it would be a reproach to the law if the Judge were required to sit still in either a civil or criminal trial, and see justice defeated through failure of counsel to ask a witness a pertinent question. The respective counsels are presumed to be thoroughly familiar with the facts of the case, and as a rule the trial will proceed in the most orderly and satisfactory manner when they are allowed to manage and conduct the examination of witnesses. But it is important that the trial Judge should also become acquainted with the facts, and if in his judgment it is necessary to elicit the truth he may interpose with questions to the witness either in direct or cross-examination and he may put leading questions or suggest the form of a question and it has even been held that a Judge may call a witness and examine him and permit or refuse either side to cross-examine such witness. Coulson v. Disborough, (1894) 2 Q. B. 316. It is obvious that these privileges of the Court should be so exercised as not to prejudice the rights of the parties, or to unduly interfere with the presumption of the cause of action or defence. The discretion of the trial Court will not be interfered with except in a clear case of abuse. While the Judge may of course state the grounds of his rulings in receiving or rejecting testimony comment upon the weight of the evidence at the time of its introduction should be avoided as an invasion upon the province of the jury. The Court may often with great propriety ask questions of a witness on the stand for the purpose of bringing out the facts of the case, but should never indulge in remarks to witnesses, or in comments upon their testimony which may either magnify or diminish its effect upon the jury as to credibility or value. While the Judge may so interpose questions, his comments if any, should be so guarded as not to prejudice the parties, even though not directed against them. For example, when the Judge said "I don't think going over the same ground so much does any good. I suppose that the jury knows more about forest fires than any of the witnesses that are testifying or any of the attorneys in the case," the Court held the remark improper as an invitation to the jury to use their own knowledge of forest fires in determining the issues in the case rather than the testimony of the witnesses. Belk v. Stewart, 160 Mo. App. 706. Except prejudice is shown, an improper comment or remark is not sufficient to call for a reversal. Phillips v. Beene, 16 Ala. 720. And the error has been held cured by proper instructions to disregard the statement. Chicago City R. Co. v. Jordan, 116 Ill. App. 630. Burr Jones, § 815. "I think that under section 165 of the Indian Evidence Act the judgment must be based upon facts declared by the Act to be relevant and duly proved." Shah J. in Ismail v. Emperor, 26 Ind. Cas. 995=16 Bom. L. R. 934=16 Cr. L. J. 83=2 Bom. Cr. C. 252. When the defence is based on s. 84 of the Indian Penal Code, the Sessions Judge may under section 51 of the Criminal Procedure Code and section 165 of the Indian Evidence Act, ascertain the behaviour exhibited by the prisoner during the years of his life previous to the homicide, and if accused has been kept in a lunatic asylum, record medical evidence of the facts observed there, and of the opinion formed as to his particular form of lunacy. Queen Empress v. Donqor, R. 11 Un. Cr. C. 279.

The provisions contained in this section and in Order XIII r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code are intended to arm the Court with a power of initiative in getting at the truth. The essential duty of the judicial office is not to decide which party has made the better fight, but to ascertain as far as judicially possible on which side the truth lies and to adjudicate accordingly. The act of sending for a document under s. 165, Evidence Act, or for a record under Order XIII r. 10 does not ipso facto make such document or record evidence in the case. If the document is itself relevant, it must be duly proved after it has been formally introduced into the case. Punya v. Bhadu, 9 N. I. R. 11=18 Ind. Cas. 837.

S 165

Under this section a Magistrate is entitled to put to a witness any question at any time and in any form Pratap v Emperor, Ind Rul. 1930 Nag 273

Construction of the section This section is capable of two widely different interpretations (a) It may mean that the Judge may introduce into the case, without any restrictions except those stated in the second proviso, any irregular evidence he pleases, that he might for example, ask a witness what some respectable persons had told him about the matter in dispute, evidence which, though properly speaking, is inadmissible might be quite trustworthy. But then what is the meaning of the first proviso? How is the Judge to make use of the irregular evidence at all, if he is not allowed to base his judgment upon it, or at least to some extent? Even if he uses it only to corroborate other evidence, he still has a his judgment partly upon it. (b) The other possible construction of the section is that it only empowers the Judge to ask irregular questions in order to discover or obtain proper, that is, regularly admissible, evidence. For example in a case of murder, when the weapon, had not been found, a witness might state in answer to the Judge that he had heard that the accused had secreted it in a certain ditch. The statement, being hearsay, would be inadmissible but the Judge, by means of it, might be able to direct an enquiry which would lead to the weapon being found. Upon the second of these two constructions of the section the first proviso would prevent less difficulty. But then it is not easy to see why the first clause of the second proviso was inserted. This clause would be quite intelligible if the section were intended as a general relaxation of the rules of evidence, but why should not a Judge who was merely hunting up evidence look to a copy in order to see whether it was worth while to endeavour to procure the original. It may further be observed that if that clause on the other hand refers to the evidence to be accepted in the case itself, it appears to be mere surplusage, as the first proviso has already declared that the facts must be duly proved; i.e., where the fact is contained in a document primary evidence of that document must as a general rule be given. In the first view, it would modify the rules of evidence to a very considerable extent. In the second view the section would add little, if anything, to the already existing law. Warkby Ev pp 114 115. Under this section, a Judge has the power of asking irrelevant questions to a witness, if he does so in order to obtain proof of relevant facts, but if he asks questions with a view to criminal proceedings being taken against him he is not bound to answer him and cannot be punished under s 179 I P Code. In re Hari Lal Shman, Cr Rg 14 10 1885.

Ask any question 'The ordinary practice in a properly constituted Court is that where a witness for the prosecution is not called on the part of the Crown, he is placed in the witness box in order that the defence may have an opportunity of cross-examining him, and certainly, where the Judge thought it necessary to call one of these witnesses for the purpose of eliciting some facts which he thought material for the prosecution, the prisoner ought to have been allowed an opportunity of putting any question that he thought necessary in cross examination.' Per Jackson J in Empress v Grish Chandra 5 C 614. Under s 165 of the Evidence Act a Judge has power to ask any question he pleases about irrelevant facts if he does so in order to discover or obtain proof of relevant facts. Queen Empress v Hari Lalshman 10 B 185, see also R v Atrun, 2 I R 603. It is not the province of the Court to examine the witness, unless the pleaders on either side have omitted to put some material question or questions and the Court should as a general rule leave the witness to the pleaders to be dealt with as laid down in s. 133 of the Act. The Judge's power to put questions under s 165 is certainly not intended to be used in the manner which we have had occasion to notice in the present case. Per Garth C J in Noor Bux v Empress, 6 C 279. The Court is not entitled to put questions with regard to the statements made by witnesses to the investigating officer in order to show that the witnesses had made contradictory statements to the police and before the Court. Section 165 of the Evidence Act does not give such a power to the Court, as it amounts to introducing evidence in contravention of the law viz section 163 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Keramat v Emperor 42 C L J 523 = A I R. 1926 Cal 147 = 92 Ind Cas 453. The provision of section

165 cannot be used in contravention of 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code Maung Hlin Gyaw v Maung Po, 4 Rang 471=99 Ind Cas 1019=28 Cr L J 219=A I R 1927 Rang 74 The Court's decision must rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony Luchram v Rudha, 34 C L J 107, Bhagwan v Shamser, 33 P L R 1918=44 Ind Cas 433 A Court of appeal cannot set things right on appeal unless it is established that the intervention with questions of a trial Judge, with a view to clear up obscurities, and generally to elicit the truth, exceeded the bounds of the provisions of s 165 and so impeded the legitimate work of counsel engaged in the cause as to amount to a material error leading to failure of justice Surendra Krishna v Ramee Dasee, 17 C 1043=24 C W N 860=33 C L J 34=59 Ind Cas 814 A Judge is justified in using his knowledge about the character of the parties in a suit to come to a decision upon the credit to be attached to their evidence on the case set up by them San Hla v Mt Khorow, 9 L B R 160=45 Ind Cas 734=11 Bur L T 98

S 165.

Cross examinations on answers given to the Court. In Sukham v Mundy, 11 B H C R 509 at p 510, West J said: "When the counsel for the prisoner has examined or declined to cross examine a witness, and the Court afterwards, of its own motion, examined him the witness cannot then, without the permission of the Court, be subjected to cross examination. When after the examination of a witness by the complainant and the defendant, the Court takes him in hand he is put under special pressure as the Judge is empowered to ask any question he pleases, in any form, about any fact relevant or irrelevant (s 165 Indian Evidence Act) and he is therefore, at the same time placed under the special protection of the Court, which may at its discretion, allow a party to cross examine him but this cannot be asked for as a matter of right. This principle applies equally whether it is intended to direct the examination to the witness's statements of fact or to circumstances touching his credibility, for any question meant to impair his credit tends (or is so designed) to get rid of the effect of all his answers and of each of them just as much as one that may bring out an inconsistency or contradiction. It is then a cross-examination upon answers—upon every answer given to the Court—and is subject to Court's control." In Coulson v Disborough, (1894) 2 Q B 316, Lord Esher M R said: "If what the witness has said in answer to the questions put to him by the Judge is adverse to either of the parties, the Judge would no doubt allow, and he ought to allow, the party's counsel to cross examine the witness upon his answers. A general fishing cross examination ought not to be permitted." This dictum was approved by Farwell L J in In re, Enoch and Zaretsky 79 L J K B 363=(1910) 1 K B 327 C A. The words "any witness" in this section include a Court witness. It is doubtful how far the right to cross examine such a witness is an absolute right or requires the leave of the Court. Makund Singh v Mt Ghafurumissa 9 O & A L R 549=74 Ind Cas 108. The Court should not examine a witness without notice to the parties or their pleaders and without affording them an opportunity to cross examine him or to rebut his statements. Section 165 of the Evidence Act does not justify such procedure. When a Court examines a witness without notice to the pleaders and bases its decision upon the evidence of the witness, it acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction within the meaning of s 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. Pearul v Pearul, 22 Ind Cas 407.

It follows that a Judge's questions may be leading in form. "Folly my lords," said Lord Ellenborough, C J "has said that in examining the witness, we put leading questions? The accusation is ridiculous, it is almost too absurd to deserve notice. In the first place, admitting the fact, can it be objected to a Judge that he put leading questions? Can it be objected to persons in the situation of the commissioners that they put leading questions? I have always understood after some little experience that the meaning of a leading question was this, and this only, that the Judge restrains an advocate who produces a witness on one particular side of a question from putting such interrogatories as may operate as an instruction to that witness how to reply to favour the party for whom he is adduced. The Counsel on the other side, however, may put what questions he pleases, and frame them as best suits his

S 166 purpose, because then the rule is changed, for there is no danger that the witness will be too complying. But even in a case where evidence is brought forward to support a particular fact, if the witness is obviously adverse to the party calling him, then again the rule does not prevail, and the most leading interrogatories are allowed. But to say that the Judge on the bench may not ask what questions and in what form he pleases can only originate in that dullness and stupidity which is the curse of the age." 25 Hansard Part Deb 207

Proviso (1) Having regard to the stringent provision of this section a judgment based on irrelevant facts cannot be sustained. Ponnusami v Singaram 41 M 741=34 M L J 526=46 Ind C 849, but see Jainab v Hyder 43 M 609=56 Ind C 957. "The Evidence Act prescribes that the judgment of the Court must be based upon facts declared by the Act to be relevant and duly proved, and it would be intolerable that the Court should decide rights upon suspicious unsupported testimony." Per Jenkins C J in Sreemulley Mohun Bibi v Saral Chand, 2 C W N 17 (27) see also Ismael v Emperor, 26 Ind Cas 995=16 Bom L R 934, Luchman v Radha, 31 C L J 107, Bhaquan v Shamser 33 P L R 1918=14 Ind C 433, Queen v Pitamber 7 W R Cr 25, Emperor v Jadub Das 27 C 295=4 C W N 129. Court ought not to comment adversely on witness's conduct relying on matters which are not evidence. Amar Nath v Emperor 87 Ind C 143=26 Cr L J 463=A I R 1925 Lah 187. The proceeding of a confidential inquiry containing an opinion on an ex parte investigation is inadmissible in evidence. It is the duty of the Judge to record a finding on the evidence adduced by him. Buldeo v Sheoraj 66 Ind Cas 807.

Proviso (2) Where the question is asked with a view to criminal proceedings being taken against the witness the witness is not legally bound to answer it, and he cannot be punished under s 179 I P Code for refusing to answer. Queen Empress v Hari Lakshman 10 B 185. A witness should not be coerced to answer a question. Queen Empress v Ishri, 8 A 672 (675).

166 In cases tried by jury or with assessors, the jury

Power of jury or assessors to put questions or assessors may put any questions to the witnesses, through or by leave of the Judge, which the Judge himself might put and which he considers proper.

Scope The privilege to examine witnesses has long been extended to jurors when exercised to draw out or clear up some uncertain point. Scharfer v St Louis 128 Mo 64. Burr Jones § 815. R v Lillyman, (1896) 2 Q B 167. The assessors or may also, like the jury be allowed to put questions through the Court to witness under examination. Empress v Icrumal, 24 M 523. It is often desirable that the jury should have an opportunity of viewing the spot in controversy since the knowledge derived by these means is far more satisfactory than any obtainable by the mere examination of maps or places which are often inaccurate and obscure and may perhaps have been prepared with an express view to mislead. Taylor § 538, see also In the matter of petition of Lajit 19 A 302. section 293 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But the jurors and assessors can only view the scene of the alleged offence and cannot examine any witnesses on the spot, because by sub section (2) of s 293 the officer conducting the jurors or assessors to the spot cannot suffer any other person to speak to them. Queen v Chutturdhore, 5 W R 59.

CHAPTER XI

OF IMPROPER ADMISSION AND REJECTION OF EVIDENCE

167 The improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it shall appear to the Court

No new trial for improper admission or rejection of evidence before which such objection is raised that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision, or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision

Scope of chapter XI The Act concludes with repeating the provision of Act II of 1835 to the effect that the improper admission or rejection of evidence is not ground for a reversal of the judgment or for a new trial of the case if the Court considers that, independently of the evidence improperly admitted, there was evidence enough to justify the decision, or that if the rejected evidence had been admitted, it ought not to have varied the decision. When therefore an appeal is grounded on the improper exclusion or admission of evidence the appellant must be prepared to show not only that there has been an improper admission or exclusion, but that a miscarriage of justice has been thereby caused. Cun Ev 70, 71 In his introduction to the Indian Evidence Act, Sir James Fitzjames Stephen observed in connection with sections 5-11 "Important as these sections are for purposes of study and in order to make the whole body of law to which they belong easily intelligible to students and practitioners not trained in English Courts, they are not likely to give rise to litigation or to nice distinction. The reason is that s 167 of the Evidence Act which was formerly s 57 of Act II of 1835, renders it practically a matter of little importance whether evidence of a particular fact is admitted or not. The extreme intricacy and minuteness of the law of England on this subject is principally due to the fact that improper admission and rejection of a single question and answer would give right to a new trial in a civil case, and would upon a trial be sufficient ground for quashing of a conviction before the Court for Crown Cases Reserved. The improper admission or rejection of evidence in India has no effect at all, unless the Court thinks that the evidence improperly dealt with either turned or ought to have turned the scale. A Judge moreover if he doubts as to the relevancy of a fact suggested, can if he thinks it will lead to anything relevant, ask about it himself under s 165" Steph Introduction p 73

Retrospect in English law Whenever the Court admits irrelevant evidence the party infected by such evidence, should then and there make objection to it. An objecting counsel is entitled to an immediate ruling, before the close of the proponent's case, declaring the evidence admissible or inadmissible. By orthodox English rule two remedies were open to the party against whom the trial Court gives the ruling (1) 'He may tender a bill of exception or he may first ask the Judge to make a note of the tender, and if the request is denied then tender his bill of exception' Per Lord Abinger C B in Gibbs v Pit, 9 M & W 351, 360. An exception is an objection taken at the trial to a decision upon matter of law. An exception is a protest against a ruling of the Court. It is notice to the Court and opposing counsel that the objector does not acquiesce in the ruling. State v Laundry, 206 Ptt 290. The exception must be written, for its main object is to preserve in it the fact and the terms of the dispute. The exception, must contain all that is necessary for determining the issue made. It must therefore include the offer of evidence, the objection with its reasons, the ruling, and the notice of exception taken. Wigmore § 20. The other remedy open to an aggrieved party is by a motion for a new trial. By the orthodox English practice the remedies of new trial and of bill or exceptions were regarded as alternative and mutually exclusive. Moreover, the bill of exceptions came to be only rarely chosen for establishing errors in evidence rulings, partly because of its greater formality and expense, partly because the tradition persisted (ever since the statute of Edward I) that a bill of exceptions involved in some degree a reflection on the trustworthiness of the trial Judge as being incapable or unwilling to note correctly the point in dispute. Gibbs v Pit, 9 M & W 351, Wigmore § 20

S 167

Material error, now trial under English law. The original and orthodox English Rule is plain. An erroneous admission or rejection of a piece of evidence was not sufficient ground for setting aside the verdict and order a new trial, unless upon all the evidence it appeared to the Judges that the truth had thereby not been reached. In R v Ball R & R 133, the Court observed: 'Whether the Judges on a case reserved would hold a conviction wrong on the ground that some evidence had been improperly received, when other evidence had been properly admitted that was of itself sufficient to support the conviction, the Judges seemed to think must depend on the nature of the case and the weight of the evidence. If the case were clearly made out by proper evidence, in such a way as to leave no doubt of the guilt of the prisoner in the mind of any reasonable man, they thought that as there could not be a new trial in felony, such a conviction ought not to be set aside because some other evidence had been given which ought not to have been received. But if the case without such improper evidence were not clearly made out, and the improper evidence might be supposed to have had an effect on the minds of the Jury, it would be otherwise.' Wigmore § 21. Such was the rule in the King's Bench in criminal cases (Tindler's case R & R 133 R v Peal 11 East 311 R v Freble, 164) as well as in civil cases. Tryphut v Wynne, 2 B & Ald 554, 559. The same rule was adopted by Lord Mansfield C J in Hayford v Wilson, 1 Taunt 12 14, in the Common Pleas. In that case the learned Chief Justice, said: 'Neither will the Court set aside a verdict on account of the admission of evidence which ought not to have been received, provided there be sufficient without it to authorize the finding of the jury.' This rule was also explicitly approved in Doe v Tyler, 6 Bing 561. Such was equally the practice in Chancery, when issues had been sent to a jury in a Common Law Court. Wigmore § 21. In Pemberton v Pemberton 11 Ves 50, 52, Lord Eldon, L C said: 'If upon the whole record he is satisfied that justice has been done, though he may think, that some evidence was improperly rejected at law he is at liberty to refuse a new trial.' Similarly in Lorton v Kingston, 5 Cl & F 213 340, Lord Coltenham L C said: 'The true consideration always is whether upon the whole there appears to be such a case as enables the Judge in equity satisfactorily to administer the equities between the parties without the assistance of another trial.' All this lasted down to the decade of 1830. In that decade the Court of Exchequer in Crease v Barnett (1835) 1 C M & R 919 announced a rule which in spirit and in a later interpretation signified that an error of ruling created per se for the excepting and defeated party a right to a new trial. Wigmore § 21. see also Doe v Langfield 16 M & W 497, 515. The new Exchequer rule was speedily accepted in the other Courts. (Vide Rutzen v Farr, 4 A & E 53, Wright v Tatham 7 A & E 313 330), and for something more than a generation it remained the law of England until it was reformed away, for civil causes in 1875. Wigmore § 21. In R v Gibson, L R 18 Q B D 547 540 Lord Coleridge C J said: 'Until the passing of the Judicature Acts, the rule was that if any bit of evidence not legally admissible, which might have affected the verdict, had gone to the jury the party against whom it was given was entitled to a new trial.' See also Campbell v Loder, 34 L J Ex. 53.

Now the civil cases in England are governed by the Judicature Act, 1873 and Rules of the Supreme Court. Rule 6 of Order 39 of the same runs as follows: "A new trial shall not be granted on the ground of misdirection or of improper admission or rejection of evidence. Unless in the opinion of the Court to which the application is made some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned in the trial." So a new trial will not be granted unless the evidence had been admitted would have had some legitimate effect on the verdict [Manley v Palmer (1895) 73 L J 93] nor when the evidence has been prematurely admitted but which would have become inadmissible in the course of the trial [Fannell v Wallare, (1876) 35 L J 361]. And the same rule applies where evidence has been wrongly admitted. If there is other evidence to sustain the verdict and no substantial wrong or miscarriage has occurred in the trial the verdict must stand. Tait v Beggs (1905) 2 I R 527 C A. See for examples, MacLarn & Sons v Davis, (1890) 6 T L R 372, Lians v Myther

Tydfil Urban Council, (1899) 1 Ch 241, Ratcliffe v Evans, (1892) 2 Q B 524 For a case where a new trial was granted because evidence of an illegal agreement was wrongly admitted in support of the claim for damages, see Harper v Epyolfsson (1914) 2 K B 411. In England the rule 6, is not applicable to the Divorce Court Allen v Allen, (1894) P 255 "I doubt the possibility of formulating any general rule" said Lord Watson "applicable to the construction of Rule which would be useful, and I do not doubt the inexpediency of making the attempt. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances." Bay v Ford (1896) A C 44 (50). In the same case Lord Halsbury said "A substantial wrong is occasioned where the defendant has not been permitted to present his case to the jury, or in important and serious topic has been practically withdrawn from the jury." See also Lionel Barber & Co v Deulch Bank, (1919) A C 304 H L, Yearly Practice 1921 p 603.

The fact that evidence was improperly admitted or rejected at the trial is a good prima facie ground for granting a new trial. The onus of proving that no substantial wrong or miscarriage was thereby occasioned lies on the respondent. Anthony v Halstead, 37 L T 433, Bay v Ford (1896) A C 44, Tait v Beggs (1905) 22 Ir R 525. The Court of Appeal will not entertain technical objections to the admissibility of documentary evidence not taken in the Court below and which if taken might have been met by calling further evidence. Bradshaw v Widdington, (1902) 2 Ch 430, Powell Ev 704.

So far as criminal cases were concerned, the Judge had a discretion to state a case for the Court of Crown Cases Reserved under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Viet C 78) where admission or rejection of evidence was improperly made. The jurisdiction under this Act was transferred to the Judges of the High Court by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act of 1873 and though sections 3 and 5 of the Crown Cases Act were repealed by the schedule to the Criminal Appeal Act of 1907 (7 Ed VII, C 23,) the right to reserve a question in a point of law to the Court of Crown Cases Reserved was not affected by it. In practice however such cases are now submitted to the Court of Criminal Appeal. Steph Dig Ev Art 143. Section 20 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Ed VII C 23) runs as follows: "The powers and practice now existing in the High Court in respect of motions for new trials or the granting thereof in criminal cases are hereby abolished." Where the trial has been a nullity the Criminal Court of Appeal has power to order a Venue de novo, although the Cr Appeal Act of 1907 does not expressly confer that power on the Court. Crane v Public Prosecutor, (1921) A C 299=94 L J K B 1160, Dennis v Parler, (1924) 1 K B 863=96 L J K B 388, R v Hussey, 18 Cr A R 121. In King v Beecham, (1921) 3 K B 464 the Court observed that even if the illegal evidence had not been admitted still the jury must have found the defendant guilty of man slaughter.

English and Indian Law differentiated. Under Rule 6, Order 39 of the Rules of Supreme Court, the Court will interfere only when some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been occasioned on the trial by improper admission or rejection of evidence, but in India such interference is legal when such improper admission or rejection of evidence would have varied the decision. In the second place under the English law in such cases only a new trial can be granted but under this Act the decision may also be reversed.

Scope of the section. This section is verbatim reproduction of section 57 of Act II of 1855. This rule has been adopted from the Common Law Courts of England. In Hughes v Hughes, 15 M & W 701 (1846), Alderson B said "The Court will not grant a new trial if with the evidence rejected a verdict given for the party offering it would be clearly against the weight of evidence, or if without the evidence received there be enough to warrant the verdict." The reason of the rule is thus forcefully stated by Porter J in an American case "These circumstances which were established by evidence, confessedly competent, were so conclusive as to the guilt of the prisoner that no honest jury could refuse to convict him of the crime. To acquit him would be to shield guilt from justice and deny the protection of law to the innocent. If therefore, the Court below is right in holding that the Judge erred in admitting addi-

S 167. nual evidence leading to the same conclusions, we think it was clearly wrong in reversing the conviction, for, upon the facts disclosed, the supposed error could work no legal injury to the prisoner. As it was shown, beyond all question, by undisputed and competent proof, that the accused was one of the murderers, we are under no legal or moral obligation to assume that the jury might have rendered a false verdict of acquittal but for this erroneous admission of other and needless evidence. In this respect there is no distinction between civil and criminal cases. The reception of illegal evidence is presumptively injurious to the party objecting to its admission, but where the presumption is repelled and it clearly appears, on examination of the whole record, beyond the possibility of rational doubt that the result would have been the same, if the objectionable proof had been rejected, the error furnishes no ground for refusal. Hyman v. Wainwright, 10 M. I. A. 125, where the case had been sought to be supported by false evidence, the Court considered the case on its merits on the independent evidence, apart from the forged North v. 167, see also Singh v. Gopalar v. Chinnappa Narayana, 10 M. I. A. 171, J. P. 111 v. Sundulooonassa, 7 W. R. P. C. 13=11 M. I. A. 171, Moharajah Juggut v. Bhaya Parvati, 11 W. R. C. R. 19, Mohur v. Ghuriba, 6 B. L. R. P. C. 495. In Mohor Singh v. Ghuriba, 6 B. L. R. P. C. 495 the Court said "It seems to their Lordships that giving full weight to all these objections there is still sufficient and more than sufficient proof in the unsuspected evidence given in the cause to support the decrees against which the appeal is brought. Their Lordships, of course do not give to a decree founded upon evidence which has been so impeached, the same weight which they would give him to the finding of an Indian Court upon evidence against which no objection can be challenged. But they are not in the position of a Court of Law in this country before which on a motion for new trial, it is shown that evidence improper to be admitted has been admitted before the jury. The Court in those cases are not Judges of fact, and are unable to say what weight the jury may have given to the evidence that ought not to have been admitted. But it is the duty of their Lordships who are Judges of the fact in such a case as this to consider whether throwing aside the evidence which ought not to have been admitted, there still remains sufficient evidence to support the decrees. Their Lordships nevertheless must express their regret that the Court of first instance in the case before them should have been as lax at it has been in the admission of evidence. The improper reception of evidence is always to be deprecated, if only from its tendency to provoke an appeal. See also Unde Rajah Raju Bommaraju Bahadur v. Pemmasamy Venkataray, 7 M. I. A. 128, North v. 343.

In cases of doubt the Judge should decide in favour of admissibility of the evidence under consideration rather than of inadmissibility. Collector of Gorakhpur v. Palakdhari, 12 A. 1 (F. B.)

This section is equally applicable to civil and criminal cases. This section applies to criminal as well as to civil cases whether or not the trial has been had before a jury. Imperatrix v. Pitamber, 2 B. 61, Queen v. Hurrishole Khumel, 1 C. 207=25 W. R. C. R. 36, Reg v. Navajo, 9 B. H. C. R. 358. The words "in any case" in s. 167, Evidence Act, are wide and include criminal trials by jury. Queen Empress v. Ramchandra, 19 B. 749.

If it shall appear to the Court, etc. The expression in this section "the Court before which such objection is raised," includes the reviewing of Appellate Court. Imperatrix v. Pitamber, 2 B. 61. This section applies as well to the High Court sitting as a Court of original jurisdiction as to the same Court sitting for the consideration of a reserved point. Reg v. Navajo, Dada Bhai, 9 B. H. C. 358 per Green J. The provisions of this section are made applicable by the clearest possible words to all judicial proceedings in or before any Court, and are, therefore, applicable to the High Court, sitting under s. 26 of the Letters Patent, "to determine the point of law reserved and pass such judgment and sentence as to the Court shall seem right" Ibid, per Straight C J in ibid, contra per Bayley J in ibid. This section applies to criminal trials by jury in the High Court. Reg v Navon Dadabhai, 9 B H C 358

Effect of improper admission and rejection of Evidence in civil cases. The improper admission of the copy of a deposition of a living witness is not ipso facto, ground for a new trial, where there is ample evidence to justify the decision independently of the evidence so admitted. Wooma Kanto v Gunga Naram, 20 W R 384. In civil cases in India there is no difficulty, on principle as regards the working of this section. In England in civil as well as criminal cases the Court is not a judge of facts. The jurors are judges of facts, and as such some difficulty may be felt by the Appellate Court to decide the effect of evidence improperly admitted in the minds of the jurors. So in India in civil cases "it is the duty of their Lordships who are Judges of the fact to consider whether throwing aside the evidence which ought not to have been admitted, there still remains sufficient evidence to support the decree." Mohar Singh v Ghuriba, 6 B L R 495 P C = 15 W R 8 P C. So under this section, the improper admission of evidence is not ground of itself for a reversal of any decision if it appears to the Court that independently of the evidence improperly admitted, there is sufficient evidence to justify the decision. A Court competent to deal with facts should ignore the evidence wrongly admitted and consider whether there still remains sufficient evidence to support the judgment. Khul Sanhar v Emperor, 82 Ind Cas 283. The Judicial Committee will not determine an appeal against a decree upon the mere fact that some evidence has been improperly admitted by the Court below. It is the rule of that tribunal to do substantial justice between the parties and to see if there is sufficient evidence on the whole record to justify the conclusion to which the Court below has arrived. Goshain Tota v Richmonee, 13 M I A 77, see also Baboo Bhodnarain v Omiao Singh, 13 M I A 519 = 15 W R P C 1, Lala Banshudhor v The Government of Bengal, 9 B L R 371 = 14 M I A 86 P C, Bommaranave v Rangasuami, 6 M I A 23, Maharaja Jagadindra v Bhaba Tarinee 5 B L R Ap 54 = 14 W R 19, Muhammad v Abdul, 20 W R 458.

In Nitbasu Singh v Nandlal, 8 M I A 199 = 1 W R P C 51, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed "The learned counsel for the appellant have not strongly contended that the proper order to be made on this appeal is one remanding the cases for retrial. We have rather insisted that on the materials now before their Lordships, he is entitled to have the decree made in his favour by the Principal Sadr Amin affirmed. Their Lordships, however, desire to observe that in their judgment the majority of the Sadr Court was right in treating the cause as ripe for final decision. The appellant hid, at all events from the date of the settlement of the issues, clear notices of what he had to prove. He had been called upon to adduce further evidence on those issues, if he had any to give. He advisedly declined to do so, and called for the judgment of the Court upon the evidence already given. If this manner of trial were irregular it is not for him to complain of an irregularity committed at his instance or with his consent. And the suspicion however probable of the Judge, that a party who has failed to prove his case, may be more successful on a second and fuller investigation is no sufficient ground for directing a new trial." The decision of a Court must rest upon legal grounds established by legal testimony and not upon mere suspicious circumstances. Sethi Maniklal v Bhoj Singh, 25 C W N 409 = 62 Ind Cas 356 (P C).

Objection in second appeal. An erroneous omission to object to inadmissible evidence does not make it admissible. The omission to take objection to the admissibility of a document becomes fatal only in cases where if the objection is taken in time any defect in its admissibility could be cured and the document made admissible. In other cases objection as to inadmissibility can be raised even in second appeal though it was not raised in the lower Courts. Choonilal v Nilmadhab 41 C L J 374 = 66 Ind Cas 734 = A. I. R. 1925 Cal 1034, see also Miller v Malho Das, 19 A 76 P C, Jagadis v Harihar, 40 C L J 39, Luchram v Radhacharan, 34 C L J 107.

167

Where the finding of the lower Court is based on unproved and consequently inadmissible document, the judgment is vitiated thereby and must be set aside, where an appellate Court has relied for its decision upon a document which is inadmissible in evidence a Court of second appeal will be justified in remanding the case for decision to the appellate Court with a direction to exclude that document from its consideration. Hem Raj v Akhal Singh, 7 Lah L J 352=26 P L R 632=90 Ind Cas 678

The improper admission of evidence is not by itself a ground for a new trial if there is other independent evidence to justify the decision. But there is difficulty in applying this principle to cases which come before the High Court in second appeal because the Court has no power to deal with the sufficiency of the evidence. In such cases unless it is apparent from the judgment itself that the Judge decided the case on other evidence independently of the evidence in dispute the proper procedure for the High Court is to remand the case to the lower Court. Brajendra Kishore v Mohanachandra, 31 C W N 32

Mere omission to object to a document which is not in itself admissible as evidence does not constitute such document so as to be available to either side at the trial. It is the duty of the Court apart from any objection by the parties or their pleader to exclude all irrelevant evidence. Where the lower Court has based its decision partly on irrelevant evidence the High Court will not in second appeal decide whether the other evidence in the case is sufficient to support the findings arrived at, s 167 is not a bar to such a case being remanded. Mussamat Sumita v Ram Kuer Choubey, 5 P L J 410=57 Ind Cas, 561

On second appeal, the High Court has generally speaking no right to look at the evidence to decide whether the remaining evidence in a case other than that which has been improperly admitted, is sufficient to warrant the finding of the lower Court. The only cases which can be with propriety disposed of under such circumstances without a remand, are those, where, independently of the evidence admitted, the lower Court has apparently arrived at its conclusion upon other grounds. Woomesh Chunder v Chunder Charan, 7 C 293

An objection as regards the modes of proving a document should be taken at the time when the document is tendered. Madhabi v Gagannendra, 9 C W N 11

When a subordinate Court has refused in the erroneous exercise of its discretion to receive documentary evidence which might have been accepted, the High Court has power to interfere in second appeal. Talewar v Bhagwan Das, 8 C L J 147=12 C W N 312

Where no objection was taken as to the admissibility of a document in the Court of first instance, it is not allowable to take the objection in appeal. Ram Prosad v Lala Sham, 6 C L J 22, see also Shahzadi Begam v The Secretary of State, 6 C L J 678=34 C 1039 P C=9 Bom L R 1192, Albar Bhैया Lal, 6 C 666

Improper admission and rejection of evidence in criminal cases. The words "in any case" in s 167 of the Evidence Act, are wide enough and include criminal trials by jury. The English law with reference to the granting of new trials when evidence has been improperly admitted, does not apply to India. Where part of the evidence which has been allowed to go to the jury is held to be inadmissible, it is open to the High Court in appeal either to uphold the verdict upon the remaining evidence on the record, or to quash the verdict and order a new trial. Queen Empress v Ram Chandra, 19 B 749. Where no objection was raised to the reception of improper evidence in the lower Court and the appellate Court finds, that there is sufficient evidence, discrediting the improper evidence admitted, to sustain a conviction, the appellate Court should not interfere with the conviction. Reg v Prabhu Das, 11 B H C R 90. Though s 167 of the Evidence Act implies that the improper reception of evidence is not generally to be made a ground for the reversal of a judgment, unless it was objected to by the party prejudiced by such reception, yet, s 256 of the Criminal Procedure Code lays down that it is the duty of the Judge in his discretion to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence whether it is objected to by the party or not. Reg v Dayanand 11 B H C 44 Where there is sufficient evidence to justify the conviction, independently of the evidence objected to, the decision of the lower Court should be affirmed Emperor v Aloomiya, 28 B 129 (152)

When a case has been tried before a jury and the conviction has been set aside on the ground of misdirection, the accused is entitled to have his case retried by a jury, and, as a matter of procedure and in justice to the accused this course should be adopted. Acting on this principle the Court declined to exercise its powers under section 167 of the Evidence Act and sent back the case for retrial. Sheikh Hayy v King Emperor, 14 C W N 593=11 Cr L J 301=5 Ind Cas 315

At the trial of a party of Hindus for rioting, the Magistrate, instead of examining the witnesses for the prosecution, caused to be produced copies of the examination in chief of the same witnesses which had been recorded at a previous trial of a party of Muhammadans who were opposed to the Hindus in the same riot. These copies were read out to the witnesses, who were then cross examined by the prisoners, and no objection to this procedure was taken on the prisoners' behalf. The accused were convicted. Held, that although the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was irregular, the irregularity was cured by the provisions of s 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code and of s 167 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), as it was not shown that there had been any failure of justice or that the accused had been substantially prejudiced, and as the matter elicited in cross examination was sufficient to sustain the conviction. Queen Empress v Nand Ram, 9 A 609. In Emperor v Narayan 9 Bom L R 789=32 B 111 F B, Davar J said "Then again under s 167 of the Evidence Act all that we have to do after rejecting the piece of evidence complained of as being improperly admitted is to see if there is 'sufficient evidence' to justify the decision. The confession is evidence recorded in the case. Its admissibility has been adjudicated upon. We are not a Court of appeal in the ordinary sense of the term. I do not think it is open to us under the present circumstances to go behind the record of the case, scrutinize every piece of evidence, and enter upon an elaborate investigation as to whether each particular piece of evidence recorded by the learned Judge and to which the accused's counsel now takes exception was or was not rightly recorded, such a course does not appear to be intended to be followed by s 26 of the Letters Patent and there is nothing in s 167 of the Evidence Act to justify such a procedure."

Where inadmissible evidence has been received the Court of appeal has to consider whether the reception of inadmissible evidence influenced the minds of the jury so seriously as to lead them to a conclusion which might have been different but for its reception and whether it has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. Hendora v Emperor, 81 Ind Cas 451=26 Cr L J 307. Under section 165 of the Evidence Act the improper admission of evidence is not ground of itself for reversal, if apart from it there is other evidence to support the decision. Ordinarily in such cases the case should be remanded to the trial Court to exclude the evidence and give a fresh finding with reference to the rest of the evidence. Kumba Sankar v Kalli Marappa, 82 Ind Cas 283=25 Cr L J 1275. Where the improper admission of evidence has not prejudiced the accused in any way being of little significance it is not a ground for a new trial. Ranjit Dasadh v Emperor 7 Pnt L T 673=95 Ind Cas 273=27 Cr L J 753=A I R 1926 Pat 211. Where independently of the police diary wrongly relied upon by the Court below, there was ample legal evidence to corroborate the prosecution case and to sustain the conviction, the High Court in revision will condone the irregularity and refuse to interfere. Achhabai v Emperor, 3 Pnt L T 293=61 Ind Cas 230=22 Cr L J 374.

SCHEDULE

ENACTMENTS REPEALED

(See section 2)

Number and year	Title	Extent of repeal
Stat 26 Geo III, Chap, 57 *	For the further regulation of the trial of persons accused of certain offences committed in the East Indies, for repealing so much of an Act, made in the twenty fourth year of the reign of his present Majesty intituled '(An Act for the better regulation and management of the affairs of the East India Company and of the British possessions in India, and for establishing a Court of Judicature for the more speedy and effectual trial of persons accused of offences committed in the East Indies),' as requires the servants of the East India Company to deliver inventories of their estates and effects for rendering the laws more effectual against persons unlawfully resorting to the East Indies' and for the more easy proof, in certain cases of deeds and writings executed in Great Britain or India	Section 38 so far as it relates to Courts of Justice in the East Indies
Stat 14 & 15 Vict, Chap 99 †	To amend the Law of Evidence	Section 11 and so much of section 19 as relates to British India ‡
§ *	* * * *	* *

* The East India Company Act, 1786

† Short title, The Evidence Act, 1851—see the Short Titles Act, 1896 (59 &amp; 60 Vict., c. 111)

‡ Certain portions after this repealed by Act IV of 1927 have been omitted

§ The entry relating to ss 7 and 9 of the General Clauses Act, 1868 (1 of 1868), was repealed by the General Clauses Act, 1897 (10 of 1897)

APPENDIX A *

(1) PLACES TO WHICH THE ACT HAS BEEN SPECIALLY APPLIED

Names of Places	Notification or other authority	Where published
1 Civil and Military Station of Bangalore	No 318 D dated the 16th Jan 1917	British Enactments in Force in Native States, 3rd Edition Supp to Vol I p 4
2 Administered Areas in the Hyderabad State, namely, the cantonments of Secunderabad and Auringabad, the Hyderabad Residency Bazzars, and the lands in the Hyderabad State occupied by His Exalted Highness the Nizam's Guaranteed State Railway System, by the South East main line of the great Indian Peninsular Railway by the broad gauge North West line of the Madras and Southern Maratha Railway and by the Secunderabad Gadwal section of the Secunderabad Gadag Railway	No 582 I B dated the 22nd March 1913, as amended by No 399 D dated the 18th January 1917	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol I p 227
3 Administered Areas in central India, namely the cantonments of Mhow, Nimach, Nowgong, Sehore, Agar and Guna, the Indore Residency Bazzars, the Gwalior Residency Area the Sutna Agency and the Civil lines of Nowgong	No 2365 I B, dated the 14th November 1912	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Edition Vol I p 10
4 Mumpur [For purposes of cases in which British subjects are parties (except in cases in which no British subject other than a native of the Naga Hills, Chin Hills, or Lushai Hills, districts is concerned) and in cases arising within the limits of the British Reserve]	No 535 I B, dated the 12th March 1909	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Edition Vol IV p 11
5 Jammu and Kashmir (Territories in which the Governor General in Council has jurisdiction)	No 260 I B, dated the 10th February, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Edition, Vol I p 372

* In making the list up to date Macpherson's lists of British enactments in force in Native States and Mr Justice Woodroffe's Evidence Act as well as Mr Justice Field's Evidence Act have been consulted.

A

Names of places	Notification or other authority	When published
6 Abu District	No 2221 I B dated the 1st October, 1917	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Supplement to Vol I p 49
7 Baroda Cantonment (Baroda State)	No 162 I B dated the 28th January, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed Vol I p 79
8 Territories included in the political Agency of Kathiawar	No 8944, dated 17th December 1912	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol IV p 178
9 Deesa cantonment	No 5287 dated the 30th July, 1906	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol IV p 389
10 Civil Station of Kolhapur	No 1803 I dated the 9th November, 1887	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol IV p 389
11 Berar	No 3510 I B, dated the 3rd November 1913	British Enactments in force in Berar, p 4
12 Lands occupied by the Rajputana Malwa Railway in the Nabha and Patiala States	No 517 I B dated the 17th March, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol V p 18
13 Lands occupied by the Jodhpur Bikaner Railway in the Patiala State	Ditto	Ditto
14 Lands occupied by the Kalka-Simla Railway in the Patiala Baghat and Keonthal States	Ditto	Ditto
15 Lands occupied by the Ludhiana Dhuri Jakhai Railway in the Malerkotla Patiala, Nabha and Jhind States	Ditto	Ditto
16 Lands occupied by the Rajpur Bhatinda Railway in the Patiala, and Nabha States	Ditto	Ditto
17 Lands occupied by the Southern Punjab Railway in the Patiala, and Jhind States	Ditto	Ditto

Names of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
18 Lands occupied by the Jullundur Doab Railway in the Kapurthala State	No 1439 D, dated the 31st March, 1916	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed, supplement to Vol V p 3
19 Lands occupied by the Phagwara Rahon Railway in the Kapurthala State	Ditto	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed, supplement to Vol V p 3
20 Lands occupied by the Jind Panipat Railway in the Jhind State	No 833 I B, dated 16th May 1916	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed, supplement to Vol V p 4
21 Lands occupied by the Bombay Broda and Central India Railway in the Bajana, Lakhur Wadhwan, Wadhen District Thana and Patri States	No 781 I B dated the 9th April, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed, Vol V p 58
22 Lands occupied by the Bhavnagar Railway in the Bhiluka Thana, Songadh Thana, Palitana and Jasdan States.	Ditto	Ditto
23 Lands occupied by the Dhrangadhara Railway in Dhrangadhara and Wadwan States	Ditto	Ditto
24 Lands occupied by the Gondal Porbandar Railway in the Vithralgarh, Gondal and Nawanagar States	No 781 I B dated, the 9th April 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed Vol V p 58
25 Lands occupied by the Jamnagar Railway in the Dhol, Jaha, Nirwanagar, Pal and Rajkote States	Ditto	Ditto
26 Lands occupied by the Jitalsar Raj Kot Railway in the Gudhka Gondal, Kotla San gami, Kotharia, Lodhika, Rajkot, Shapur, Virpur, Jetpur and Junagarh States	Ditto	Ditto
27 Lands occupied by the Junagarh Railway in the Bantva, Munvadar, Sardargarh and Jetpur Bilkhia States	Ditto	Ditto
28 Lands occupied by the Khujadia Amreli Chulala Railway in the Jatpur Luni State	Ditto	Ditto

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

App A.

Names of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
29 Lands occupied by the Morvi Railway in the Dhol, Gavra, dad, Kotharia, Morvi, Rajkot, Wankaner, Dhrungadhura, Lakhtar, Muli, Sayla and Wodhan States	No 781 I B dated the 9th April, 1930	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol V p 58
30 Lands occupied by the Godhra Ratlam Nagda Railway in the Jhobur, Indore, Sailana, Ratlam and Gwalior States	No 262 I B dated the 10th February 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol V p 88
31 Lands occupied by the Nagda Ujjain Railway in the Gwalior State	Ditto	Ditto
32 Lands occupied by the Nagda Muttra Railway in the Gwalior Dewas(Senior), Dewas (Junior), Indore, Jhalawar Kotah, Bundi, Tonk, Jaipur, Karauli and Bharatpur States	Ditto	Ditto
33 Lands occupied by the Rajputana Malwa Railway in the Alwar, Jaipur, Jodhpur, Kishengarh, Sirohi, Bharatpur, Mewar, Tonk, Gwalior, Indore, Sadana, Jhona, Ratlam, and Dhar States	Ditto	Ditto
34 Lands occupied by the Bhopal Itarsi Railway in the Bhopal State	Ditto	Ditto
35 Lands occupied by the Bhopal Ujjain Railway in the Bhopal, Gwalior, Indore, Dewas (Senior), and Dewas (Junior) States	Ditto	Ditto
36 Lands occupied by the Baran Kotah Railway in the Kotah State	Ditto	Ditto
37 Lands occupied by the Baran Guna Baran Railway in the Kotah, Tonk and Gwalior States	No 262 I B dated the 10th February, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed, Vol V p 88
38 Lands occupied by the G I P Ry in the Bhopal, Kurwai, Gwalior, Kaniadhar, Orchala, Datto, Dholepur, Santhar, Alipura, Garrauli, Pabra and Taron States	Ditto	Ditto

Names of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
39 Lands occupied by the Bhavnagar Ry in the Wadhwa, Limbdi, Chudā Bholā, Barādā and Bhavnagar States	No 783 I B 9th Apr 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Vol V p 65
40 Lands occupied by the Junagadh Railway in the Gondal and Junagadh States	Ditto	Ditto
41 Lands occupied by the Khajadi—Amreli Chaulia Railway in the Beroza State	Ditto	Ditto
42 Lands occupied by the Gondal Porbunder Railway in the Bhavnagar Beroza, Luthi Banva, Jitpur, Kotda Patta Junagadh and Gondal Street	Ditto	Ditto

2 PLACES TO WHICH THE ACT HAS BEEN GENERALLY APPLIED IN COMMON WITH OTHER ENACTMENTS IN FORCE IN NEIGHBOURING BRITISH DISTRICTS OR PLACES UNDER BRITISH JURISDICTION

Vide Extent and application of the Act at p 29 supra
1 The Political States of Serukela and Kharsawin in Chotanagpur	No 205 I B dated the 28th January 1910	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed Vol IV p 35
2 Parganas of Todgarh, Diwar, Stroth, Chong and Kot Karan	No 38 I dated 8th March 1872	Ditto Vol I p 572
3 Cantonment, Deoli	No 99J, dated the 18th June, 1875	Ditto Vol I p 393
4 Ramandurang (in respect to Criminal Jurisdiction over all persons not only subjects of the Rajah of Sinduri)	No 1019 I dated the 5th March, 1891	Gazette of India, 1891 Part I page 121
5 Feudatory States of Sirgiva Jaspur Udaipur, Korla and Chongbharkar	No 1069 I B dated the 3rd April, 1919	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol IV p 101
6 Parts of the Naonwan Assigned Tract formerly administered by China	No 783 I B, dated the 2nd June 1899	Ditto Vol. IV p 409
7 Kasumpti, Simla (Koonthul Hill State)	No 1516—I dated the 15th May, 1895	Ditto Vol IV p p 443

App A.

Names of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
29 Lands occupied by the Morvi Railway in the Dhol, Gavri dad, Kotharia, Morvi, Rajkot, Wankaner, Dhrangadhara, Lakhtar, Muli, Sayli and Wadhwa States	No 781 I B dated the 9th April, 1930	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol V p 68
30 Lands occupied by the Godhra Ratlam Nagda Railway in the Jhabua, Indore, Sailana, Ratlam and Gwalior States	No 262 I B dated the 10th February, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol V p 88
31 Lands occupied by the Nagda-Ujjain Railway in the Gwalior State	Ditto	Ditto
32 Lands occupied by the Nagda Muttra Railway in the Gwalior Dewas (Senior), Dewas (Junior) Indore, Jhalawar Kotah, Bundi, Tonk, Jaipur, Karauli and Bharatpur States	Ditto	Ditto
33 Lands occupied by the Rajputana Malwa Railway in the Alwar, Jaipur, Jodhpur, Kishengarh, Sirohi Bharatpur, Mewar, Tonk, Gwalior, Indore, Sailana, Jhona Ratlam, and Dhar States	Ditto	Ditto
34 Lands occupied by the Bhopal Itarsi Railway in the Bhopal State	Ditto	Ditto
35 Lands occupied by the Bhopal Ujjain Railway in the Bhopal, Gwalior, Indore, Dewas (Senior), and Dewas (Junior) States	Ditto	Ditto
36 Lands occupied by the Baran Kotah Railway in the Kotah State	Ditto	Ditto
37 Lands occupied by the Bina Guna Baran Railway in the Kotah, Tonk and Gwalior States	No 262 I B dated the 10th February, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed, Vol V p 88
38 Lands occupied by the G I P Ry in the Bhopal, Kurwa, Gwalior, Kaniadhar, Orchha, Datia, Dholepur Santhar, Alipura, Garrauli, Pabra and Farson States	Ditto	Ditto

Names of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
39 Lands occupied by the Bhavnagar Ry in the Wadhwa, Limbdi, Chudā Bholā, Barādī and Bhavnagar States	No 783I B 9th Apr 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Vol V p 65
40 Lands occupied by the Junagadh Railway in the Gondal and Junagadh States	Ditto	Ditto
41 Lands occupied by the Khajadi—Amreli Chauluka Railway in the Baroda State	Ditto	Ditto
42 Lands occupied by the Gondal Porbander Railway in the Bhavnagar, Baroda, Lathi Banva, Jitpur, Kotla Pitta Junagadh and Gondal Street	Ditto	Ditto

2 PLACES TO WHICH THE ACT HAS BEEN GENERALLY APPLIED IN COMMON WITH OTHER ENACTMENTS IN FORCE IN NEIGHBOURING BRITISH DISTRICTS OR PLACES UNDER BRITISH JURISDICTION

Vide Extent and application of the Act at p 29 supra
1 The Political States of Scrubela and Kharsawan in Chotanagpur	No. 205 I B dated the 28th January 1910	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed Vol IV p 35
2 Parganas of Todgarh, Diwar, Siroth, Chong and Kot Karan.	No 33 J dated 8th March 1872	Ditto Vol I p 572
3 Cantonment, Deoli	No 99J, dated the 18th June, 1875	Ditto Vol I p 593
4 Ranandurang (in respect to Criminal Jurisdiction over all persons not only subjects of the Rajah of Sinduri)	No 1018 L dated the 5th March, 1891	Gazette of India, 1891 Part I page 124
5 Feudatory States of Sirgivi Jaspur Udaipur, Korca and Chongbarkar	No 1069 I B, dated the 3rd April, 1919	British Enactments in Force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol IV p 101
6 Parts of the Naronwan Assigned Tract formerly administered by Chum	No 783 I B, dated the 2nd Jan, 1899	Ditto Vol IV p 409
7 Kasumpti, Simla (Konthal Hill State)	No 1516—I dated the 15th May, 1885	Ditto Vol IV p p 443

App A

Names of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
8 Lands occupied by the Banalore Branch of the Madras and Southern Marhatta Railway	No 507 I dated the 6th February, 1896	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed Vol V p 121
9 The Mysore State Railway from and inclusive of the Bagalore Railway Station to the Hubli end of Thengabhadro Bridge at Harihar	Ditto	Ditto
10 The Mysore State Railway from and inclusive of the Yeswanthipur Junction Railway Station to the frontier of the State	Ditto	Ditto
11 Lands occupied by the Mysore Section of the Southern Marhatta Railway	No 3173 I dated the 10th September, 1889	British Enactments in force in Native States, S India (Madras & Mysore) (1890 Ed p 238 ) Ditto p 687
12 Lands in the Hyderabad State occupied by the Southern Marhatta Railway	No 4564 I dated the 18th November, 1891
13 Lands in the Hyderabad State occupied by the Barsi Light Railway	No 3244 I B dated the 26th August, 1897	Ditto p 688
14 Lands occupied by the Travancore Branch of the South Indian Railway in the Travancore Estate	No 1474 B dated 20th April, 1906	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed Vol V p 120
15 Lands occupied by the Shornur Cochin Railway in the Travancore and Cochin States	No 5096 I B dated the 27th December, 1906	Ditto p 119
16 Lands occupied by Tippl valley Railway in the Sicheu and Bironda States	No 778 I B dated the 9th April 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed Vol V p 35
17 Lands occupied by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway in the Kurandyad (Junior) and Hyderabad	Ditto	Ditto
18 Mewar and Mirwar Marwar	No 38 I dated the 8th March, 1872	List of British Enactments Rajputana, Ed 1900, 56
19 Balaram Cantonment (in Hyderabad State)	No 3317 I dated the 3rd October, 1890	Gazette of India, 1890, Part I p 721
20 Hanohi Cantonment (Hyderabad State)	No 2007 I dated the 11th May, 1891	Gazette of India 1891, Part I p 201

Names of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
21 Raichore Cantonment (Hyderabad State)	No 3300-I dated the 8th August, 1891	Ditto p 475
22 Aurangabad and Jilna Cantonments (Hyderabad State)	No 4015 I dated the 2nd October, 1891	Ditto p 565
23 Mominabad Cantonment (Hyderabad State)	No 4607-I dated the 24th November, 1891	Ditto p 649
24 Lands occupied by the Bengal Nagpur Railway in the Rowa, Kharagarh, Nawgaon, Sakti, Raigarh Gangpur, Basua, Kharswan, Seraikella, Mayurbhanj Patna, and Khandi States	754 I B dated the 28th March, 1912	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Edition Vol. V p 7
25 Lands occupied by the Indian Midland Railway	Ditto	Ditto
26 Lands occupied by the Bengal Dooria Railway in the Cooch Behar State	Ditto	Ditto
27 Land occupied by the Eastern Beagal Railway in the Cooch Behar State	Ditto	Ditto
28 Kumaoti Simla (Keonmat Hill State)	No 1576 I dated the 15th May, 1885	List of British Enactments in force in Native States (Northern India) 1900 Ed p 94
29 Lands occupied by the Bengal and North Western Railway in the Benares State	No 1947 I B dated the 16th September 1912	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Edition Vol. V p 11
30 Lands occupied by the Rujputana Malwa Railway in the Bharatpur State	Ditto	Ditto
31 Lands occupied by the Agra Delhi Chord Railway in the Bharatpur State	Ditto	Ditto
32 Lands occupied by the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway in the Benares and Rampur States	Ditto	Ditto
33 Lands occupied by Rohilkhand and Kumaon Railway in the Rampur State	Ditto	Ditto

App A

Names of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
34 Lands occupied by the Rajputana Malwa Railway in the Nabha, Pataudi, Durrani, Jind, Patiala, and Faridkot States	No 515 I B dated the 17th March, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed Vol V p 13
35 Lands occupied by the Delhi Ambala Kalka Railway in the Patiala States	Ditto	Ditto
36 Lands in the Nabha Patiala and Kapurthala Faridkot and Jammu States in the Punjab occupied by the North Western Railway	Ditto	Ditto
37 Lands occupied by the Southern Punjab Railway in the Bawalpur and Bikaner States	Ditto	Ditto
38 Lands occupied by the Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway in the Baroda and Pandu Mewas States	No 778 I B dated the 9th April, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol V p 35
39 Lands occupied by the Barot Light Railway in the Hyderabad and Miraj (Senior) States	Ditto	Ditto
40 Lands occupied by the Ahmedabad Porbandar Railway in the Baroda, Baniya Thana and Idar States	Ditto	Ditto
41 Lands occupied by the Godhra Ratlam Nagda Railway in the Baria State	Ditto	Ditto
42 Lands occupied by the Mehsana Railway in the Baroda, Kutch, and Jhansi States	Ditto	Ditto
43 Lands occupied by the Billimora Kalamba Railway in the Baroda and Binsda States	Ditto	Ditto
44 Lands occupied by the Petlad Cambay Railway in the Baroda and Cambay States	Ditto	Ditto
45 Lands occupied by the Rajpipla Railway in the Rajpipla State	Ditto	Ditto
46 Lands occupied by the Godhra Junagadh Railway in the Junagadh State	No 778 I B dated the 9th April, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed Vol V p 37

Names of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
47 Lands occupied by the Chhinnar-Shivrajpur Light Railway in the Baria and Chhota Udepur States	Ditto	Ditto
48 Lands occupied by the Madras and Southern Marhatta Railway in the Hyderabad, Ramdrug, Sangli Akalkot Jamkhandi Miraj (Junior), Savanur, Kurandvad (Junior) Kurandvad (Senior) Kolhapur Miraj (Senior), Aundh and Phaltan States	Ditto	Ditto
49 Lands occupied by the North Western Railway in the Khairpur State	Ditto	Ditto
50 Lands occupied by the Tinnevely Quilon Railway in the Travancore State	No 316 D dated the 16th January, 1917	British Enactments in force in Native States 3rd Ed Supplement to Vol V p 8
51 Lands occupied by the Palanpur Decatur Railway in Palanpur State	No 779 I, B dated the 9th April, 1913	British Enactments in force in Native States, 3rd Ed Vol V p 30
52 Lands occupied by the Ruyana Malwa Railway in the Palanpur and Beroza States	Ditto	Ditto
53 Lands occupied by the Kolhapur Railway in the Kolhapur and Miraj (Senior) States	Ditto	Ditto
54 Lands occupied by the Sangli Railway in the Sangli and Miraj (Senior) States	Ditto	Ditto

3 PLACES BEYOND INDIA TO WHICH THE ACT HAS BEEN MADE APPLICABLE BY HIS MAJESTY IN COUNCIL FOR PURPOSES OF CASES IN WHICH HIS MAJESTY HAS JURISDICTION

1 Zanzibar	Zanzibar order in Council, dated the 7th July, 1897 Art 11 (b) and Schedule I	Is of Enactments Ed 1900, pp 515 and 530
------------	---	--

App A

Names of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
2 Persian Coast and Islands	Persian Court and Islands order in Council dated 7th May, 1907	Gazette of India 1907, Part I, p 469
3 Somaliland Protectorate	Somaliland order in Council dated the 7th October, 1899, Art 7 and Schedule	Statutory Rules and Orders Vol V p 173
4 East Africa Protectorate	The East Africa orders in Council, dated the 7th July, 1897 Art 11 (b) and Schedule	Statutory Rules and Orders, 1897, p 134
5 Bahrein	The Bahrein order in Council 1913	Gazette of India 1915 Part I p 231
6 Maskat and Omran	The Maskat order in Council 1915	Gazette of India 1917, Part I p 899

4 A LIST OF SOME NATIVE STATES IN INDIA WHICH HAVE ADOPTED THE ACT AS THEIR LAW

1 Puddu Kottai ( Madras Presidency )	Puddukottai Regulation II of 1882	See Note in Native States East Southern India (Madras and Mysore) Ed 1898 p 20
2 Sindur (Madras Presidency )	Introduced by the Raja	Ditto
3 Mysore	Schedule attached to the Instrument dated 1st March, 1881 transferring the Government to the Maharaja	British Enactments Native States, Southern India (Madras and Mysore) Ed 1899, p 57
4 Akalkot (Bombay Presidency)	Notification No 3413 dated the 19th July 1880	Bombay Government Gazette 1880, Part I p 658
5 Janjira (Bombay Presidency)	Notification by the Nawab of Janjira	Not known
6 Jath (Bombay Presidency)	Notification by the Chaf of Jath dated 5th May 1883	Ditto

Name of places	Notification or other authority	Where published
7 Kolhapur State (Bombay Presidency)	Notification by the Council of Administration on behalf of the Minor Raja, dated the 25th Feb, 1888	Ditto
8 Miraj (Junior) (Bombay Presidency)	Notification by the Joint Administrators on behalf of the minor Chief, dated the 10th Aug, 1888	Ditto
9 Ramdurg (Bombay Presidency)	Ditto, dated the 17th December 1888	Ditto
10 Sachin (Bombay Presidency)	No 2983 dated the 7th May 1887 (on behalf of the Government of the Nawab of Sachin)	Bombay Government Gazette, 1887 Part I, p 377
11 Sawantwadi (Bombay Presidency)	Notification No 540 dated the 10th March, 1888 by the Political Superintendent of the State (on behalf of the Government of the chief)	Not known
12 Savanur	Notification dated the 21st May, 1897 by the Administrator of the State (on behalf of the minor Nawab of Savanur)	Published in the Savanur State on 25th July 1897
13 Imakhandi (Southern Marhatra Country)	Notification dated 1st February, 1901, by the Political agent	Not known *

* In addition to the Native States that have adopted the Act it may be mentioned that in the Kathiawar Agency, rules based on the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) have been brought into force by Notification No 1, dated the 5th January, 1874, see Kathiawar Agency Gazette, 1874, supplement p 23

APPENDIX B

FIFTH REPORT OF HER MAJESTY'S COMMISSIONERS TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY

We, your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to prepare a body of substantive law for India, now humbly submit to Your Majesty rules of law which we have prepared on the subject of evidence.

India does not at present possess an uniform law upon the subject. Within the Presidency towns the English law of evidence is in force, modified by certain Acts of the Indian Legislature, of which Act II of 1855 is the most important.

This Act contains many valuable provisions. It extends the range of judicial notice and facilitates the proof of documents, of foreign system of law and of matters of public history. It removes incompetency to testify by reason of interest or relationship, renders parties to suits liable to be called as witnesses, and makes husband and wife competent witnesses for or against each other in civil proceedings, renders dying declarations admissible though the declarant may have entertained hopes of recovery, provided that witnesses may be cross-examined by the party who called them, and that they shall not be excused from answering questions because they may thereby criminate themselves. Declarations which were against the pecuniary interest of the persons who made them and entries according to the usual course of business, both of which kinds of evidence the English law admits only in cases of death are under this Act admissible if the person who made the declaration or the entry has become incapable of giving evidence or if his testimony cannot be procured. The Act also gives to books regularly kept, and to certain commercial documents, the character of corroborative, though not of independent evidence, and makes entries in such books independent evidence of certain formal matters, it extends the class of persons whose declarations are admissible in case of pedigree, and provides in effect that mistake committed in the rejection or reception of evidence shall not lead to a new trial or to the reversal of a decision unless a substantial failure of justice has been caused thereby. The Act, however, bears reference in many places to the existing law, and it appears to have been designed not as a complete body of rules, but as supplementary to, and corrective of, the English law, and also of the customary law of evidence prevailing in those parts of British India where the English law is not administered.

This customary law has not assumed any definite form, the Mahomedan law since the enactment of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, has ceased to have any validity in the country Courts, even in criminal matters and those Courts have in fact no fixed rules of evidence except those contained in Act II of 1855. They are not required to follow the English law as such, although they are not debarred from following it where they regard it as the most equitable.

In laying down uniform rules for the guidance of the Indian Judges in general, as well in the Courts of just mentioned as in those in which the English law of evidence has hitherto prevailed we do not think that it would be advisable to adopt a system so artificial as that which has grown up in this country.

The English practice has been moulded in a great degree by our social and legal institutions and our forms of procedure and much of it is admitted to be unsuited to the various states of society and the different forms of property which are to be met with in India. In England the aim has been to avoid presenting to the consideration of the jury whatever it was thought could not safely be presented to an unprofessional tribunal. In order to obtain this end various kinds of evidence which were deemed little worthy of credit, were pronounced inadmissible, and a great deal of evidence which, if duly weighed and dispassionately considered would tend to the elucidation of truth, is absolutely excluded. On the other hand, evidence is admitted which is at least as dangerous as that which is shut out. Thus parent and child cannot refuse to bear testimony for or against each other in criminal cases, while a wife cannot be asked a question on the trial of her husband unless the trial be for an offence committed against herself. In matrimonial cases the inconsistencies of the laws to incompetency of the married persons to give evidence cause frequent embarrassment, and even occasional failure of justice.

In a country like India where the task of judicial investigation is attended with peculiar difficulties, and where it is the duty of the Judge in all civil, and in some criminal cases, to decide without a jury, there is a great danger of miscarriage from the mind of the Court being uninformed than from it being unduly influenced by the information laid before it. It seems, therefore, better to afford every facility for the admission of truth, although with some risk that falsehood or error may be mixed with it, than to narrow, with a view to the exclusion of falsehood, the channels by which truth is admitted. It is, of course, impossible to admit all evidence that may be offered, for this would lead to excessive waste of time, but we have provided that all relevant evidence not expressly excluded by our rules shall be admissible, and that except in those few cases where the law itself attaches a special importance or effect to particular evidence, the Court shall decide for itself whether any weight, and what weight shall be assigned to each piece of evidence that is submitted to it. The Judge must, of course, form his own opinion regarding the relevancy of any evidence which the parties may desire to submit to him, but it is often difficult especially in the early stage of a trial, to show the exact bearing of each piece of evidence upon the issues. It is by no means our desire that our rules should be understood as imposing upon the Judges the use of excessive strictness in excluding evidence of which the applicability cannot be fully shown at the moment when the evidence is tendered. We have, however, inserted provisions intended to guard against the trial of collateral issues arising out of questions asked with a view to impugn the credit of witnesses.

It will be seen that we have discarded, for the most part, the rules which limit the discretion of the Court in drawing its conclusions from the whole of the evidence. While we do not interfere with those provisions of the Act for the registration of assurances or of the Code of Criminal Procedure which recognise certain things as prima facie evidence, that is to say, as conclusive unless met by counter evidence yet we do not by our own rules attach this character to evidence of any class nor, except where the testimony of a witness has been attacked,—do we recognise anything as corroborative though not independent evidence. We have provided that a Court may not upon the testimony of a single witness even in the case of the gravest offences against the State, or of perjury, or of criminal charges supported by the evidence of accomplices alone.

An attempt to define all the cases in which, and the purposes for which, particular evidence may be received would in our opinion impede instead of aid the investigation of truth. We hope that the course which we have adopted will render it easier for those who administer the law to avoid the error so often committed in practice where a strict standard of admissibility exists—that of supposing that whatever evidence is admissible comes in some degree accredited to the Court.

The exclusion of even of relevant evidence may be desirable, when the evidence is such that people are naturally inclined to attach undue importance to it, when it is such as cannot be admitted without the danger of encouraging, forgery, or when it is such as cannot be received, or it least cannot be extorted without injury to interests which are even more important than the judicial investigation of truth.

Although we have laid it down generally that all relevant evidence shall be admissible, we have thought it necessary to make certain exceptions from this rule. These exceptions relate chiefly to that kind of evidence which is described in the English law books under the title 'hearsay.' We have however abstained from making use of the word 'hearsay' from the uncertainty and vagueness of the meaning usually attributed to that word. What a witness says as to what some other person has said or written may be called 'hearsay.'

B in one sense of that word, and that the wisest or popular sense, but the statements by a witness by what he has heard another person say may be, in fact (as in cases of slander) the very matter in issue, or in other case may be part of the circumstances which it is essential to ascertain. On the other hand, "hearsay" may be defined to be that which a witness does not say as of his knowledge, but says that another has said or signified to him. This is probably a more strict and accurate definition of the word "hearsay" as used in the English law, but it does not include all that is known in that law as hearsay.

After much considering this subject, we have thought that it would promote a more accurate apprehension of our meaning, and be of more practical utility in the Indian Courts, if we were to exclude the word altogether. We have, therefore, without attempting any definition of the word "hearsay", endeavoured to lay down rules for the exclusion of that class of evidence in the cases in which we think it ought to be excluded, and for the admission of it in the cases in which we think it ought to be admitted. We have accordingly gone through the various class of evidence in which arises the question of admissibility or exclusion what is called in the English law "hearsay" and have endeavoured to state the rule applicable to each class. Most of the rules for the admissibility of this kind of evidence are recognized by the English law, others are in accordance with the Indian Act II of 1835, above referred to, or are intended to relax the English rule still further than was done by that enactment.

We have, for instance, made admissible in evidence that which has been spoken, written, or otherwise intimated in the ordinary course of business by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured, and we have admitted entries in books kept in the ordinary course of business. We have also made admissible written acknowledgments of the receipts of money, goods, securities, or property of any kind, and documents used in commerce. Declarations which under the English law are only admitted because they have been made against interest will, by the effect of our rules, be excluded, unless they have made in the ordinary course of business. The test of pecuniary interest is exceedingly difficult of application, and appears to us to be of little value as a test of truth.

We have admitted statements as to matters of reputation and of pedigree made by persons since dead or incapacitated, or whose presence cannot be procured, adding in the case of pedigree a proviso that the person who made the statement shall have had special means of knowledge. We have discarded the condition of the English law which requires that the statement shall have been made before the controversy had arisen as we think that this circumstance affects rather the weight than the admissibility of the statement. We have allowed a limited effect, as evidence, to newspaper reports of public meetings.

The indulgence afforded to witnesses by the existing law in permitting them to refer to contemporaneous memoranda appears to us to be carried too far when copies of such memoranda are allowed to be used for the purpose, and our rules do not permit the use of copies.

Another clause of exclusion applies to documentary evidence unless some degree of caution were observed with regard to the authentication of writings, great facilities would be afforded for the fabrication of documents. We have, therefore, laid down rules for the evidence to be required of the proper execution of documents, and, retaining the distinction between primary and secondary evidence, have provided against the admission of the latter where the former is procurable. We hope that these rules will, in combination with the laws lately passed by the Indian Legislature for the registration of assurances tend to the improvement of Indian documentary evidence.

The third case in which we have excluded testimony is, where its admission would be dangerous to the public service or inconsistent with decency or morality, with the confidence of married life or with the freedom of intercourse between a client and his legal adviser.

We have provided that questions of a criminatory tendency shall not be asked merely in order to test the credit of a witness. We have adopted section 19 of Act XIX of 1833, which excuses witnesses from producing their own revision which must, under an improved system of registration, be less suited to fulfil. Judges will, no doubt, protect witnesses from the production of their title-deeds when they are not relevant and material to the cause. We have not adopted in all respects the doctrines of the English law on the subject of the effect of the previous decisions when adduced as evidence.

To those judgments which are admitted by the laws of all other countries, not only between the parties but as against strangers, the same character in India, in all other cases we have provided that the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction upon a matter directly admissible as evidence between the same parties upon the same matter directly in issue in another cause, but that it shall not be conclusive as against strangers, we have provided that it shall be admissible merely as evidence that such a judgment was pronounced between the parties.

We have been left to draw their inference from the evidence given than if fettered by rules of presumption, which are in our opinion, incapable of being laid down as to be universally applicable. It may perhaps be made a question how far the subject of evidence falls under the head of substantive law and some of the sections of the draft now submitted certainly border closely on Procedure. Those of the draft, however, have not found a place in either of the Codes of Procedure sections, but we have inserted them (with some modifications), as it appears to us that the law of evidence ought not to be left to be gleaned from many different enactments but that so much of it as it not to be found in the Codes of Procedure should be as far as possible comprised in the rules of law now submitted by us, and that the enactments which will thus be rendered unnecessary should be repealed.

We recommend the repeal of so much of Acts II of 1855 and XIX of 1853 as run into the law of evidence, except section 26 of the latter enactment, which does not form part of the following rules the word "Court" shall be taken to comprise all civil or criminal, and all persons having by law or consent authority to take evidence, and the word "cause" shall be taken to include proceedings, civil or criminal.

EVIDENCE

MEANING OF WORDS

Admissibility

1. Wherever any evidence is said to be admissible, it is not meant that it is conclusive, but only that the weight, if any, which the decision may consider due shall be allowed to it.
2. Whenever any question has a bearing upon any question in issue in a cause, the authority of which question is material to the decision of the cause, is determined. Any thing which is excluded by the rules contained in his chapter is inadmissible until a witness of anything, or founded upon anything, or otherwise intimated by another person, and no statement spoken or written by any document, is admissible in evidence, except in the cases contained in the rules hereafter contained.
3. No statement, or otherwise intimated by another person, and no statement spoken or written by any document, is admissible in evidence, except in the cases contained in the rules hereafter contained.

Illustrations

- (a) B is tried for robbing C. A gives evidence that D told him that he saw B rob C. The evidence is inadmissible.
- (b) B is tried for robbing C. A gives evidence that D, a deaf and dumb person, intimated to him by signs that he saw B rob C. The evidence is inadmissible.

B (c) A gives evidence that B robbed C. Being asked how he knows it, he says that he knows it only because L told him so. The evidence which has been admitted must be struck out.

(d) A says that B was alive on the 1st January 1860. It appears that A does not speak to this fact of his own knowledge, but that he learnt it from a letter written to him by C, or from a newspaper or from a printed book or a picture. In each of these cases A's statement is not admissible as evidence that B was alive on that day.

(e) A says that B was alive on the 1st January 1860. Being asked how he knows this, he produces a letter, dated that day, from B whose handwriting he verifies. The letter is admissible as evidence that B was alive on that day.

4 Such evidence is admissible —

(1) Where the fact that a thing was spoken, stated or otherwise intimated is a question in issue.

Illustration

A says that he has been told by B that he saw C pick D's pocket. This is admissible in an action against B for slandering C.

(2) Where the fact that a person by or to whom the thing was spoken, written, stated or otherwise intimated was acquainted with such thing is a question in issue.

Illustration

A writes to B "I have just heard that C has failed." The letter is received by B. This letter is not admissible as evidence that C had failed, but when it is proved that C had then failed, the letter is admissible as evidence that the failure was known to A at the place and time at which the letter was written and also that B was apprised of it.

(3) Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise tends to explain any act or conduct which is a question in issue.

Illustrations

(a) A says on a trial of C for robbing D's house that he heard B say to C "D's house has been robbed" and that thereupon C fled. This evidence is admissible.

(b) On a trial of B for robbing C's house it is proved that B fled immediately after the robbery. A witness is produced who says that he heard A tell B before B fled that a warrant had been issued for his arrest under a decree of Civil Court. This evidence is admissible.

(c) A is on his trial for shooting at B with intent to kill him. It is alleged on A's behalf that the shooting was accidental. Evidence of what A said at the time is admissible as evidence either for A or against him.

(d) A sues B for compensation for maliciously causing him to be apprehended on a charge of theft. Evidence that a theft had been committed in B's house and that C told B that he saw A running away immediately after is admissible.

(e) A says that he has heard B say to C "Pay me the 1,000 rupees which you owe me." This is no evidence that C owed B 1,000 rupees but it is evidence that B claimed 1,000 rupees, and it is admissible in order to introduce evidence of what C said or did with respect to the claim.

(f) A is charged with sedition and is proved to have combined with B for seditious purposes. Evidence of words spoken by B, while taking part in a riot in furtherance of those purposes is admissible against A.

(4) Where the thing was spoken, written or stated or otherwise intimated by a party to the suit, or some one whom he represents in interest, and it is sought to be used against him.

Illustrations

(a) A brings a suit against B to establish a right of way across B's field. Evidence that C from whom B derives his title to the land, had, while owner, admitted A's right of way, is admissible.

(b) A writes to B "By the direction of C, I request you will ship for him 100 bales of cotton." The letter is evidence against A that he had received such direction from C, but is not evidence against C that he had given the direction.

(c) In a deed to which A was not a party, but which was made between B and C stringers to A it is stated that A had become insolvent. This deed is admissible against B or C as evidence in evidence to show that A had become insolvent, but it is not admissible against A for that purpose.

(5) In the cases provided for by ss 368, 369, 370 and 371 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(b) Where the evidence tendered consists in a statement which was received in evidence in a former judicial proceeding relating to the same subject and between the same parties, or those whom they represent in interest and where the person who made such statement has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or where his presence cannot be procured, provided that if such person were present his evidence would be admissible.

(7) Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated was spoken, written, stated or otherwise intimated in the ordinary course of business by a person who has died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured.

Illustrations

(a) A, the shipping agent of the firm of B and Co states in a letter to B and Co that he has just seen a certain ship of theirs sail from the port of Calcutta. The letter is admissible as evidence of the sailing of the ship.

(b) A, an attorney, prepares the draft of an intended deed to which B was to be a party, and endorses upon it a memorandum that a copy had been sent to another attorney on a certain day. The draft contains a statement that B was in insolvent circumstances. The draft and endorsement are admissible as evidence to show that such a copy was sent to the other attorney, but are not admissible as evidence to show that B had become insolvent.

(c) A, a commercial traveller employed by the firm of B and Co, to obtain orders and information in the cotton trade only, writes to B and Co that the firm of C and Co have ordered of him as such traveller a certain quantity of cotton, and in the same letter he mentions the state of the silk market. A's letter is admissible as evidence of the order given to him, but not of the state of the silk market.

(8) Where the thing intimated consists in entries in books kept in the ordinary course of business or consists in written acknowledgments of the receipt of money, goods, securities of property of any kind, or in any document used in commerce.

Illustrations

(a) Entries made by a clerk of a firm of in the books of the firm to the effect that the firm has received a consignment of cotton from A, and has purchased 50 chests of indigo from B. These are admissible in evidence against all the partners in the firm.

(b) A one of two partners, makes an entry in the partnership-books that he has lent his partners B £100. The entry is not admissible in evidence against B that A had lent him the £100.

(c) A clerk whose business it is to make entries in the books of the firm of all monies paid by him makes an entry in the books that he had paid away £100 for the firm. The entry is admissible in evidence that he had so paid away the money.

(d) The firm of A and Co keeps a book in which the despatch and receipt of letters by the firm is regularly noted. An entry in this book of the despatch of a letter on the 1st January, 1860 to the firm of B and Co is admissible in evidence that a letter was despatched on that day by A and Co to B and Co.

(e) The letters written by the firm of A and Co are, according to the ordinary course of business copied in a book, and afterwards despatched A and Co, in order to show that a letter in stated terms was despatched by them.

B. on a certain day to B and Co tendered in evidence an entry in their letter book purporting to be a copy of a letter addressed by them on that day to B and Co and an entry of the fact that such letter was despatched. The entries are admissible.

(f) A guarantees the payment by C of a sum of money due from him to B. A pays the amount to B and sues C for repayment. A tenders in evidence a receipt given to himself by B for the amount due. The receipt is admissible in evidence.

(g) A sues B for the proceeds of a cargo of cotton consigned by A to B and sold through a broker. The account sales rendered by the broker are admissible in evidence.

(h) A, a wharfinger, gives to B an acknowledgment that 100 tons of copper have been deposited at A's wharf. This acknowledgment is admissible in evidence of the fact that the deposit has been made.

(i) A effects a policy on his ship against sea risks. The ship goes to sea and sustains injury. A institutes a suit to recover damages from the underwriters. The log book of the ship is admissible in evidence.

(9) Where the thing spoken, written, stated or otherwise intimated, relates to the usages or tenets of any body of men, the constitution or government of any religious or charitable foundation, or the meaning of any technical or conventional words or terms or of any words or terms used in particular districts, or to any matter of public or general interest and was spoken, written, stated or otherwise intimated by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence or whose presence cannot be procured,

Illustrations

(a) A, in order to show the religious tenets of a certain sect, tenders in evidence a manuscript treatise proved to have been written by a deceased member of the sect. The treatise is admissible.

(b) It is a disputed fact in a suit whether a certain spot is or is not a public landing place. Statements made on the subject by A and B, now deceased who resided in the neighbourhood, are admissible in evidence.

10 Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated has reference to the relationship of one person to another and is spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured, provided that such person was a member of the family or had otherwise special means of knowledge.

Illustrations

(a) It is a disputed fact in a suit whether A is the son of B. A statement made on the subject by C, who was a nurse in B's family about the time of A's birth is admissible in evidence.

(b) A alleging that he is the son of B, deceased produces the following documents in which he is mentioned as the son of B.

1. An entry made by B in a memorandum book stating A's birth.
2. Letters which passed between two of B's brothers since deceased.
3. A deed executed by B.

A also produced witnesses who state that B told them that A was his son. The contents of the documents and the testimony of the witnesses are admissible in evidence.

(11) Where the thing intimated is a fact of a public nature and appears by a recital contained in any Act or in the Governor General of India made before or after the passing of this Act or is notified by any official communication of the Government appearing in the Gazette of India or in any paper purporting to be the Government Gazette of any Presidency or Lieutenant Governorship of British India or any colony or possession of the British Crown.

(12) Where the thing intimated is, and there has been a public meeting or public proceeding, and such intimation is contained in a report thereof published in any newspaper or journal

Explanation Such report is not admissible in evidence of any fact reported to have occurred or of any statement reported to have been made at the meeting or proceeding

EVIDENCE OF LAW OF FOREIGN COUNTRY

(13) Where the thing intimated purports to be the law of a foreign country, and appears to be contained in books or documents purporting to be printed or published under the authority of the Government of that country, or in reports of decisions of the Courts of such country

MAPS

5 Maps made under the authority of Government shall be admissible

RES JUDICATA

6 A grant of probate or of administration unrevoked shall have effect as provided by the Indian Succession Act, section 242

7 A decree declaring a marriage void is proof that the parties never were husband and wife A decree declaring a marriage dissolved is proof that the parties have ceased to be husband and wife, if they ever were such

8 A decree declaring a ship to be the captors as prize of war is proof that the ship has become the property of the captors

9 The judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction upon a matter directly in issue is admissible as evidence between the same parties, and those who represent them in interest upon the same matter, directly in issue in another cause, but not between any other parties, except as provided for in the next following section of this chapter

Illustrations

(a) A sues B for a horse alleging that it was stolen from himself and that B brought it, knowing it is to be stolen Judgment is given in B's favour B afterwards loses the horse, A finds it and B sues A for it A in defence makes the same allegations as in the former suit The judgment pronounced in the former suit is admissible as evidence in B's favour

(b) A gives B for rent in the Court of the Collector, which has cognizance of such suits B sets up in defence a mortgage under which he is entitled to retain the rent in satisfaction of the interest of his mortgage A disputes the genuineness of the mortgage, but the Court pronounces it genuine and dismisses A's suit Afterwards B sues A in the Civil Court to recover the amount due to him upon the mortgage A disputes the genuineness of the mortgage The judgment of the Collector is admissible in evidence

10 A decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction is admissible as evidence that such judgment was pronounced between the parties but is not, as against any person other than the parties thereto and those who represent them in interest, evidence, of any other fact thereby appearing

Illustrations

(a) A sues B for compensation for injury sustained through the negligence of C who is B's agent A obtains judgment In a suit brought by B against C for compensation for loss sustained, by B through C's negligence the judgment is admissible as evidence of the amount which A has been adjudged to pay, but not as evidence of B's negligence

(b) A sues B for compensation because B yielded up to C certain lands which B held as guardian of A, who was then a minor A decree passed in a prior suit, whereby B was directed to yield up possession to C as owner, is not admissible in evidence

(c) A is tried on the charge of having forged a deed of gift from B He is acquitted Afterwards C alleging the deed of gift to be forgery institutes a suit against A for certain lands, of which A has obtained possession under it The record of A's acquittal is not admissible in evidence

pp. B

(d) A, one of the three Hindu brothers, undivided in estate, dies, and his brothers, B and C alleging that they are his heirs, sell to D a portion of the land which they possessed jointly with A.

E, claiming as the adopted son and heir of A, sues for A's share of the land sold to D and obtains a decree in his favour. He afterwards claiming as such adopted son of A, sues B and C for A's share of the land which remains in their possession. The decree in the former suit is not admissible in evidence.

(e) A, alleging that he is the only brother and the heir of B, deceased sues C for possession of B's land. The Court declares A's title established and decrees that C shall yield up the land to him.

Afterwards B claims to be the son and heir of B, and sues A for possession of the lands. The decree in the former suit is admissible in evidence that A had obtained such a decree, but not admissible as evidence that he was entitled to the land as the only brother and heir of B.

(f) Two ships come into collision whereby A, a passenger in one of them, is maimed, and B's goods are destroyed. A obtains a decree for compensation from the owners of the other ship on the ground that the injuries were sustained by him through the negligence of their captain. B sues the owners of the same ship for compensation for the loss of his goods. The judgment is not admissible in B's suit as evidence of the captain's negligence.

(g) A sues B for maintenance of C, a minor, whom A alleges to be B's son. B denies that C is his son. The Court decides that C is B's son and decrees payment by B of A's claims.

B dies, C alleging that he is B's son, sues the executor of D for a legacy of A 10,000 rupees, D having by his will bequeathed that sum to every child of B. The judgment is not admissible in evidence that C is a son of B.

PROOF OF WRITINGS WHICH CONSTITUTE PRIMARY EVIDENCE

11 A writing which is not required by law to be attested, but which is alleged to have been signed by a specified person or to have been written wholly or in part by a specified person, shall not, except in the cases provided for by sections 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21 of this chapter, be received as evidence, unless the signature attached thereto or so much of the same writing as is sought to verify, be proved to be in the handwriting of the person by whom it is alleged to have been written or signed.

12 A written instrument which is required by law to be attested shall not (except in the cases provided for by section 20 of this chapter), be received as evidence unless the following rules are complied with —

(1) That execution of such instrument shall be proved by one attesting witness at the least, if there be an attesting witness alive and subject to the process of the Court by which the cause is tried, and capable of bearing testimony.

(2) If no attesting witness is alive and subject to such process as aforesaid, and capable of bearing testimony, it shall be proved that the attestation of one attesting witness at the least is in his handwriting and evidence must be adduced to show that the person who executed the instrument was the same person who is alleged to have done so.

13 In order to ascertain whether a signature, writing, or seal is genuine any signature, writing or seal, which has been admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the Judge to be genuine, may be compared with the disputed one.

14 Where a written instrument purports or is proved to be thirty years old and is produced from the proper custody, it shall be admissible in evidence without proof of its execution or attestation.

PROOF OF THE CONTENTS OF DOCUMENTS BY SECONDARY EVIDENCE

15 Evidence of the contents or purport of any written or printed document, or of letters, figure, or other mark not produced to the Court shall not be admissible except as provided by the rules next following —

(1) A copy of or extract from any proclamation, order, or regulation issued by Her Majesty or by the Privy Council or any department of Her Majesty's Government shall be admissible in evidence provided that such copy of extract is contained in the London Gazette or in such other Gazette or paper as is mentioned in section 4 clause (11) of this chapter or provided it purports to be printed by the Government printer, or to be printed under the authority of the Legislature of any British colony or possession or to be certified to be true by the proper officer

(2) A copy of a record of any Court, or of an entry in any public book or register, which is proved to be a correct copy, or which purports to be under the seal of such Court, or to be certified by the proper officer, shall be admissible as evidence of the existence and the contents of any such record or entry

(3) Evidence shall be admissible of inscriptions or marks which are proved to have been destroyed or lost, or which cannot be produced by reason of their being engraved on or affixed to trees, buildings, or other things of an immovable character

(4) Evidence of the contents of a written or printed document shall be admissible, when it has been proved that the document had been destroyed or lost, or when the person in whose custody it is, is not subject to the proviso of the Court by which the cause is tried, or is not legally bound to produce the document, or refuses, after due notice, to produce it, or when its absence is otherwise satisfactorily accounted for

EVIDENCE OF TERMS OF CONTRACT

16 Where a contract or grant or other disposition of property is in writing no evidence of the terms of such contract, grant, or disposition shall be received except the writing itself, or such evidence of its contents as may be admissible under the provisions of the last preceding section

Explanation The statement of a fact in any such document does not preclude the admission of oral evidence relating to the same fact, and where a suit is instituted for the purpose of setting aside or varying a document on the ground of a mistake in the writing thereof, evidence may be received for the purpose of proving such mistake

PAPERS OF WHICH PROOF IS NOT REQUIRED

17 No proof shall be required of the genuineness of any paper purporting to be the London Gazette or the Gazette of India, or the Government Gazette of any Presidency or Lieutenant Governorship of British India, or of any colony or possession of the British Crown, nor of any paper purporting to be a news paper or journal, or a copy of a private Act of Parliament printed by the King's printer

18 No proof shall be required of the genuineness of any paper purporting to be a certificate, certified copy, or other document which is by law made evidence of any particular fact, provided that such paper is substantially in the form and purports to be executed in the manner directed by the law in that behalf

19 No proof shall be required of the official position of any person certifying to the truth of any such paper as is mentioned in the last preceding rule

20 Any paper purporting to be a power of attorney and to have been executed before and authenticated by a notary public or any Court, Judge Magistrate, British consul or Vice-consul or representative of Her Majesty or of the Government of India shall be admissible in evidence

21 An impression of any document made by a copying machine, or a representation of anything made by means of photography or of any other process which affords a reasonable assurance or correctness shall be admissible in evidence, wherever under these rules the production of the original may be dispensed with

PERSONS WHO MAY TESTIFY

22 Those persons only shall be incompetent to testify who from tender years or from unsoundness of mind or from any other cause appear to the Judge to be incapable of understanding the questions addressed to them

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

PRIVILEGE

23 A witness is not at liberty to disclose a communication—
(1) When such communication relates to affairs of State and its disclosure has not been intimated by the proper officer

(2) Where the communication was made by one of a married couple to the other during their marriage and did not relate to a matter then in dispute in a suit pending between them, and where the consent of the person who made it or of such person be dead, of his or her representative in interest, has not been obtained for such disclosure

(3) Where the witness is a barrister, attorney, or vakil, or an interpreter or intermediate agent between the client and his legal adviser, and the communication was made by the client or principal to the witness in the course of his professional employment, or consists of any advice given or conveyed by the witness professionally to his client or principal, or of the contents of any document of his client or principal the knowledge of which the witness has acquired in the course of his professional employment, and where the client or principal or his representative in interest has not consented to the disclosure of such communication

(4) Where the disclosure demanded of the witness consisted in the production of documents belonging to another person who would not be bound to produce them if in his possession and who has not consented to their production

24 A witness is not compellable to disclose to the Court any confidential communication which may have taken place between him and his legal professional adviser

25 No communication made in furtherance of criminal purpose is protected from disclosure.

26 A witness summoned to produce a document shall, if the same be in his custody, possession or power, be bound to bring it into Court, notwithstanding any objection to the right of the party calling for it to compel its production or to its being read, or being put in as evidence or to the disclosure of its contents

The validity of any such objection made by the person bringing the document shall be determined by the Court and for the better determination thereof it shall be lawful for the Court to receive any admissible evidence which such person may give respecting it, and it shall also be lawful for the Court unless the document relates to affairs of State to inspect it and if necessary, to employ any person to interpret it under the obligation of an oath, and not to disclose its contents except to the Court, unless the Court shall decide that the document is to be given in evidence

27 No question shall be put to a married person which substantially amounts to inquiring whether that person has had sexual intercourse forbidden him or her by the law to which he or she is subject.

28 No question regarding the occurrence of sexual intercourse between a husband and wife shall be put to either of them except in the case of Christians where the suit is for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of bodily incapacity, and except in the case of persons who are not Christians where the knowledge of the fact inquired after is necessary to the determination of some question between the husband and wife according to the law to which they are subject

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES

29 The party at whose instance a witness is examined may, with the permission of the Court, cross examine such witness to test his veracity, in the same manner as if the witness had not been called at his instance and may be allowed to show that the witness has varied from a previous statement made by him

30 In order to repel an attack on the testimony of a witness any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact at or about the time when the fact took place, before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact, shall be admissible, and for the purpose a copy duly certified of any deposition or statement taken before such authority shall be admissible in evidence that such deposition or statement was made, and that it was made at the time and place, and under the circumstances, if any, which shall be stated in the certificate or on the face of the deposition or statement

31 It shall not be lawful to ask a witness, in order to test his credit, any question the answer to which might criminate or might tend directly or indirectly, to criminate him, or might expose or tend directly or indirectly to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture of any kind. But a witness shall not be excused from answering any question relevant to the matter in issue in any cause upon the ground that the answer to such question would or might criminate, or tend to criminate him, or that it would or might expose or tend to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture. Provided that no answer which a witness shall be compelled to give shall, except for the purpose of punishing him for wilfully giving false evidence in such cause, be used as evidence against him in any criminal proceeding.

32 No evidence is admissible to contradict the answers of a party or a witness as to matters affecting his character, but not otherwise bearing upon any question in issue in the cause. Evidence of statements or conduct of a witness inconsistent with his evidence as to a question directly in issue in a cause is not excluded by this rule.

Illustrations

(a) A claim against an underwriter is resisted on the ground of fraud. The party claimant is asked whether in a former transaction he had not made a fraudulent claim. He denies it. Evidence is not admissible to show that he had made such fraudulent claim.

(b) In a suit by A against B, a witness for A is asked whether he had not been dismissed from B's service for misconduct. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to contradict the witness's statement as to such dismissal. The evidence is not admissible.

(c) In an action against A for goods sold to him by B, a witness for B deposes that he saw the goods sold and delivered. He is asked whether he had given a different account of the transaction. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had given such different account. This evidence is admissible. He is asked whether he had not, after the date of the alleged sale, dealt with B as the owner of the goods. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had so dealt with B. This evidence is admissible. He is asked whether he had not given a false account of another transaction not in issue in the cause. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had given such false account. This evidence is not admissible.

(d) The witness is asked whether he had not received money or a promise of some favour from B to induce him to give his evidence. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had received such money or promise. This evidence is admissible.

33 A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing, or reduced into writing, relative to the subject matter of the cause without such writing being shown to him, but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing, his attention must before such contradicting proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him. The Court may, however, at any time during the trial require the production of the writing for its inspection, and may thereupon make such use of it for the purpose of the trials as may seem fit.

34 A witness may while under examination refer to any writing made by himself at the time of the transaction concerning which he is questioned, or so soon afterwards that it may be reasonably presumed that the transaction was fresh in his memory, and he may for the like purpose refer to a writing made by any other person, and read by the witness at the time of such transaction or so soon afterwards that it may be reasonably presumed that the transaction was fresh in his memory. In such case the writing shall be produced and

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

App. B. may be given by the adverse party, who may if he choose, cross examine the witness upon it

NUMBER OF WITNESSES

35 A Court if satisfied by the evidence given may in any case act on such evidence although there may be only the testimony of one witness. This rule is not rendered inapplicable by the circumstance that the testimony is given in a trial for giving false evidence, or for any other offence against the State, or that it is the testimony of an accomplice.

THINGS OF WHICH JUDICIAL NOTICE IS TO BE TAKEN

- 36 The Courts shall take judicial notice of—
- (1) All Acts, Regulations, and Ordinances having the force of law in any part of British India
  - (2) All public Acts of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and all local and personal Acts directed by Parliament to be judicially noticed
  - (3) The names, titles, and functions of the persons filling, for the time being any police office in any part of India,
  - (4) All divisions of time, the geographical divisions of the world, the territories under the dominion of the British Crown the commencement, continuation, and termination of hostilities between the British Crown and any other state and the existence title and national flag of every sovereign or state recognized by the British Crown
- 37 Every Court shall take judicial notice of the names of its own members and officers and of their deputies and subordinate officers or assistants, and also of all officers acting in execution of its process and of all Advocates, Attorneys, Proctors, Vakils, Pleaders, and other persons authorized by law to act before it.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION TO WHICH COURTS MAY REFER

38 A Court may in order to inform itself in respect of any of the matters mentioned in sections 36 and 37 of those Rules and also on matters of Public History, Literature, Science, or Art refer for the purposes of evidence to such Books, Maps, Almanacks, or Charts as the Court shall consider to be of authority on the subject to which they relate.

39 The foregoing Rules are to take effect subject to the provisions of the law for the time being in force regarding the registration of any document.

We humbly submit this our Fifth Report to your Majesty a Royal consideration

(Sd) ROWILLY (L.S.)
 (Sd) EDWARD RYAN (I.S.)
 (Sd) ROBERT LOWE (I.S.)
 (Sd) ROBERT LUSH (I.S.)
 (Sd) JOHN V. MACLEOD (L.S.)
 (Sd) W. V. JAMES (L.S.)

Dated this 2nd day of August 1865

INSTRUMENT of the Proceedings of the Council of the Governor General of India assembled for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations under the provisions of the Act of Parliament 24 & 25 Vict. Cap. 67

The Council met at Simla on Wednesday, the 28th October, 1865

PRESENT

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, presiding
 His Excellency the Commander in Chief G. G. S. K. C. B.
 The Hon ble G. N. Taylor
 The Hon ble H. S. Maine
 The Hon ble John Strachey
 The Hon ble Sir George Couper, Bart. C. B.
 The Hon ble Sir Richard Temple K. C. S. I.
 The Hon ble Col. H. W. Norman C. B.
 The Hon ble I. R. Cockerell.

App. B way restriction or extension with regard to the special circumstances of India, this country

On the general expediency of obtaining a codified law of evidence Mr. Maine did not suppose that there could be two opinions. He thought that the commissioners had, if anything rather understated the expediency on which such a law was desirable. They observed that India did not have any uniform law on the subject. After stating that within the Presidency towns the English law of evidence was in force, modified by certain Acts of the Indian Legislature of which Act II of 1855 was the most important, they went on to say that a customary law of evidence prevailed in those parts of India where English-law was not administered. This customary law since the added—

"Has not assumed any definite form, the Mahomedan Law Courts have enactment of the new Code of Criminal Procedure has ceased to have validity in the country Courts even in criminal matters, and those Courts are not in fact no fixed rules of evidence except those contained in Act II of 1855. They are not required to follow the English law as such although they are debarr'd from following where they regard it as the most equitable."

On looking, however, at the two Indian Evidence Acts it would seem or that they implied that the English law of evidence except where they in force it, was in force in the bulk of India the Mofussil Courts. During the last fifteen years the doctrine that the English law of evidence was in propria doubt throughout the whole of the country had certainly gained strength, and the Courts of applying that law with increasing strictness was gaining ground. Now to much evidence was received by the Mofussil Courts which the English would not regard as strictly admissible. But Mr. Maine would advise of members of Council who had more experience in the Mofussil than he had and honourable friends Sir George Couper and Mr. Cockerell, whether the Judges in those Courts did not as a matter of fact, believe that it was their duty to administer the English law of evidence as modified by the Evidence Act of 1855. In particular, Mr. Maine was informed that when a case was argued by a barrister before a Mofussil Judge, and when the English rules of evidence were presented to his attention, he did practically accept those rules and admit or reject evidence according to his construction of them.

Mr. Maine could not help regarding this state of things as eminently satisfactory. He entirely agreed with the commissioners that there were parts of the English law of evidence which were not suited to this country. They said much of the laxity with which evidence was admitted in the Mofussil Courts the truth was that this laxity was to a considerable extent justifiable. They said it appeared to Mr. Maine less in admitting evidence which under the rules of admissibility should be rejected, than in admitting and rejecting evidence without fixed rules to govern admission and rejection. Anything so capricious administration of the law of evidence was an evil, but it would be equal or perhaps even a greater evil, that such strict rules of evidence should be enforced as practically to leave the Court without the material for a decision. Mr. Maine would venture to state his impression that the fault of substance ordinarily committed by the Mofussil Courts consisted less in lax admission of evidence than in averting their attention from the evidence really before them and in conjecturing the facts of the case upon probabilities derived from a consideration of what the natives of this country would be likely to do under the circumstances. Another objection lay in the necessity which the Mofussil Judges were thus placed under of depending upon English text books. These were excellent text books of the English law of evidence, but their usefulness consisted more in refreshing knowledge which had been gained by forensic experience than in teaching knowledge. The commissioners would appear to have been right in supposing that what was wanted for the greatest part of India was a liberalized version of the English law of evidence, enacted with authority thus excluding caprice and superseding the use of text books by compactness and precision.

Another objection which Mr. Maine entertained to the present state of

The doctrine that the English law of evidence without authoritative enactment prevailed ex propria and of its own virtue, was calculated to encourage the notion that rules of evidence constituted a scientific machinery by which truth as to acts and to man's actions could be ascertained some what as physical truths could be ascertained by the processes in use among men of science. There were certain continental systems of evidence which did make a pretension to include a process of the kind. And perhaps some such theory did pervade the rules of the English law with regard to presumptions, which he was happy to see the Commissioners had discarded. But the English law of evidence as a whole made no claim to be such a system. It was justly regarded by English lawyers as a model of good sense, but it would probably have never come into existence but for one peculiarity of the English judicial administration,—the separation of the Judge of law from the Judge of fact, of the Judge from the Jury. It consisted mainly of rules of exclusion, that is of rules for keeping certain kinds of evidence out of sight of the Judge of fact. Such a system, Mr Maine apprehended could only be justified on two grounds. First of all, some evidence must be excluded. If all evidence were admitted nay, even if all relevant evidence were admitted, if everything were let in which tended to throw light on the matters in issue, the Courts would be overwhelmed. Even in England they would break down and it would be quite impossible for the Courts to discharge their functions in this country with the notorious habit of its Natives of attempting to heap on the proof by accumulating everything which has even the remotest bearing on it. It being, then, assumed that, under the actual conditions of judicial enquiry some sort of evidence must necessarily be shut out, the English law excluded those descriptions of evidence which were found practically to affect the minds of all men, except those of the most sagacious judgment, out of all proportion to the real value of such evidence. This was the case of the great department known to English lawyers as "hearsay." It was not at all meant that hearsay evidence was not incidentally valuable, and Mr Maine could well imagine a great Indian statesman conducted in an emergency to a most important conclusion by evidence which a Court of Justice would reject as absolutely inadmissible. But taking men, as you found them, and taking the average of judicial ability, it was really true that some kinds of evidence did produce an impression on the mind far deeper than was consistent with their real weight. The good sense to which the English law laid claim was evidenced by the tests which it laid down for distinguishing those kinds of evidence from those which remained. It would be presumptuous in Mr Maine to praise the Commissioners' proposals but he ventured to say that, in his humble opinion, they had wisely availed themselves of the results of English experience but had wisely modified those results upon two considerations, which, they stated as follows:—

"The English practice has been moulded in a great degree by our social and legal institutions and our forms of procedure, and much of it is admitted to be unsuited to the various states of society and the different forms of property which are to be met with in India.

In a country like India where the task of judicial investigation is attended with peculiar difficulties, and where it is the duty of the Judge in all civil and in some criminal cases to decide without a jury there is greater danger of miscarriage from the mind of the Court being uninformed than from its being unduly influenced by the information laid before it."

Mr Maine had said that he would not comment on the details of the measure, but there was one point of detail which it was necessary to notice because as it involved a financial question the Select Committee would probably not like to deal with it without knowing the opinion of the Executive Government. The Commissioners draft and the Bill based upon it saved the Registration Act but it would be observed that they did not refer to the Stamp Act. The omission in the Bill was explained by its being doubtful whether the Stamp Bill now in hands of Mr Cockerell would or would not receive the assent of the Governor General before the present measure. If the Stamp Bill were passed last, it would control the present measure. But another reason

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

1432

be assigned for the omission in the Commissioners' Draft, which deliberate Mr Maine found that the last paragraph of their on the Law of Negotiable Instruments, was to the following

App B.

must probable appeared to be the Third Report of the effect —

"Negotiable instruments have recently been subjected to a stamp duty by an Act which, like the English Stamp Act, renders instrument if its regulations are not observed. This provision of the English led to the establishment of several rules and distinctions not with inconvenience, and we would suggest that a law which merely in case of infringement would be more conducive to the Stamp Act has. For the present, we have thought it our best course to frame unaffected by the stamp law."

imposed a penalty on the Commissioners' point of view, which was the purely judicial public interest, there was no doubt that simplicity would be attained by the our rules irregular. But what would be the practical effect? His Hon'ble friend

Now from had had a vast mass of papers before him relating to the operation point of view. Mr Maine appealed to him whether the following was not a course proposed from those papers. If effect were given to the Commissioners' Mr Cockerell, there would be an enormous evasion of the law, or that evasion of the Stamp Act, by recourse to the criminal Courts for the enforcement of extent which would itself be a greater evil than the sacrifice of fair inference of revenue. Under these circumstances, the point has been consecutive suggestion either executive Government and Mr Maine had to state that, having would be proposed that the stamp duties on commercial instruments were easily penalties to any and not press hardly on the people, the Government was not any branch considered by the Government. It was put and agreed to regard to those Select Committee was named — levied, and desired to give to define and amend the Law of Evidence—The Hon'ble Mr prepared to give The Hon'ble Sir George Couper, and the Hon'ble Messrs Gordon The motion Stewart and the Mover The following adjourned till the 11th December, 1868

On the Bill Cockerell, the Forster, Shaw The Council

WHITLEY STOKES

Asst Secy to the Govt of India Home Department (Legislative)

CIVIL

The 4th Dec. of the Proceedings of the Council of the Governor-General of India for the purposes of making Laws and Regulations under the Act of Parliament 24 & 25 Vict Cap 67

ABSTRACT met at Simla on Tuesday, the 6th September, 1870

India, assembled provisions of the

PRESIDENT

The Council Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India,

K P G C S I Presiding

Excellency the Commander in Chief G C B G C S I

His Excellency Sir

The Hon'ble B H Ellis

Richard Temple

Major General the Hon'ble H W

His Excellency K, C S I

Norman C B

Fitzjames Stephen, Q C

The Hon'ble F R. Cockerell

The Hon'ble J. the Hon'ble Suramade Rajpal Hindustan Raj, Ruyendra Sri
The Hon'ble S. a Dhiraj Siva Ram Singh Bahadur of Jaypur a c s i

The Hon'ble J

His Highness Mahar

EVIDENCE BILL

Mr Stephen moved that the Hon'ble Mr Strachey be added to the Committee on the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence. His motion afforded him an opportunity of saying a few words.

The Hon'ble to the Select Committee He said that the

on a measure of the very highest importance. The Evidence Act was drafted by the Indian Law Commissioners, and sent out to this country two years ago. It was introduced by Mr. Maune, referred to a Committee, several of the members of which had now ceased to belong to the Council and published in the Gazette for general information. Objections of great weight had been taken to it by many of the most distinguished lawyers in India, and, no doubt, the subject was one which required the most careful handling. I was impossible to exaggerate the practical importance of the Bill as it would regulate the most important part of the procedure of every Court of Justice throughout the Empire. Such a measure would, of course, require the most careful consideration in each of its parts, and it appeared to him (the mover) that the great question which the Committee would have to consider was what was likely to be practically useful in the various Courts, and, in particular, in the Courts of the Mofussil. The English Law of Evidence had been gradually constructed by the decisions of successive generations of Judges and by Acts of Parliament, and it assumed throughout that the Court had the assistance of the English Law of a highly qualified Bar, that the facts in dispute were decided by a Jury, and that the Judge was to act as an umpire between two litigants, and not as an independent inquirer into facts. The result had been that the object of many of the rules of evidence was rather to bring the proceedings to a point than to aid inquiry into truth. It was not so much a guide to the Judge as a set of conditions imposed upon the parties. He (the mover) felt doubts whether such a system could be advantageously introduced into this country without great modifications.

At the same time it was necessary to take some steps. The law was in a state of great uncertainty. No one could say precisely how far the English law of Evidence did, and how far it did not, prevail in the Mofussil, and the consequence was that the subject came of great difficulty and uncertainty. As a proof of this he (the mover) might observe that in Messrs. Cowell and Woodman's Indian Digest, which contained notes of cases decided in about eight years, the title Evidence filled no less than twenty-three royal octavo pages in small print and double columns. There were probably from four to five hundred decisions noted upon the subject. This was the state of things for which the Committee would have, if possible, to provide a remedy. It was one which in justice to exceedingly hard-worked officials ought not to be permitted to continue.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned to the 20th September 1870.

WHITFLEY STOKES

SIR,

Secretary to the Council of the Governor General

The 6th September, 1870

for making Laws and Regulations

ABSTRACT of the Proceedings of the Council of the Governor General of India assembled for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations under the provisions of the Act of Parliament, 21 & 25 Vict. Cap. 67.

The Council met at Government House on Friday, the 18th November, 1870.

PRESENT

HIS EXCELLENCY the Viceroy and Governor General of India, K. P. G. C. S. I., presiding.

The Hon. ble John Strachey

The Hon. ble Sir Richard Temple

The Hon. ble J. Fitzjames Stephen, Q. C.

The Hon. ble B. H. Ellis

Major Genl. the Hon. ble H. W.

The Hon. ble D. Cowie

The Hon. ble Francis Stuart Chapman

The Hon. ble F. R. Cochrane

EVIDENCE AND INSOLVENCY BILLS

The Hon. ble Mr. Stephen moved that the Hon. ble Mr. Inglis be added to the Select Committees on the following Bills—

To define and amend the Law of Evidence.

1434

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

App B

To amend the Law of Insolvency
The motion was put and agreed to

The Council adjourned to Friday, the 9th December, 1870

WHITLEY STOKES,

Secretary to the Government of India

CALCUTTA,

The 2nd December, 1870

ABSTRACT of the Proceedings of the Council of the Governor General of India, assembled for the purposes of making Laws and Regulations under the provisions of the Act of Parliament, 24 & 25 Vict Cap 67
The Council met at Government House on Friday, the 9th December, 1870

PRESIDENT

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, K I O, C S I, presiding

The Hon'ble John Strachey,
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K C S I
The Hon'ble J Fitzjames Stephen, Q C
The Hon'ble B H Ellis
Major Genl the Hon'ble W H Norman, C B

The Hon'ble Francis Stuart
The Hon'ble J R Bullen Smith
The Hon'ble F R Cockerell
The Hon'ble J F D Inglis
The Hon'ble D Cowie
The Hon'ble W Robinson, C S I

SUNDRY BILLS

The Hon'ble Mr Stephen moved that the Hon'ble Mr Robinson be added to the select committees on the following Bills —
To define and amend the Law of Evidence
To amend the Law of Insolvency
For the Limitation of Suits
The motion was put and agreed to
The Council adjourned to Friday, the 16th December, 1870

WHITLEY STOKES,
Secretary to the Govt of India

CALCUTTA,

The 9th December, 1870

APPENDIX C

App

DRAFT REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE

The Gazette of India, July 1, 1871, Part V, p 273

The following Draft Report of a Select Committee together with the Bill as settled by them, was presented to the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 31st March, 1871 —

From Officiating Under Secretary, Home Department, No 423 dated 23rd October 1868 and enclosures

From Assistant Secretary, Foreign Department, No 337 dated 12th December 1868, and enclosures

Remarks by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice of Bombay (no date)

Remarks by Hon'ble Justice Phera dated 8th December, 1868

From Secretary to Chief Commissioner British Burma No 525—1, dated 1st December, 1868

From Assistant Secretary to Government of Bengal Legislative Department No 37 dated 9th January 1869, and enclosure

From Deputy Judge Advocate General of the Army dated 26th January, 1869, and enclosures

From Officiating under Secretary Home Department No 258 dated 17th February 1869 forwarding memorial from Muk-tars and Revenue Agents, Howrah dated 4th February, 1869

From Secretary to Indian Law Commissioners dated 6th February 1869

From Chief Secretary to Government Fort St George, No 120, dated 18th March 1869 and enclosures

From Secretary to Government of Bombay No 2971, dated 7th September 1869 and enclosures

From Secretary to Government of Bombay, No 3188, dated 24th September 1869, and enclosures

Fifth Report of Her Majesty's Law Commissioners on the Bill

From Officiating Inspector General of Police, Punjab, No 2657, dated the 28th September 1870

From Secretary to Government of India Home Department, No 1892, dated 18th October 1870 forwarding letter from Chief Commissioner, British Burma, No 61, dated 15th August 1870, and enclosures

We the members of the Select Committee to which the Evidence Bill has been referred have the honour to report that we have considered the Bill and the papers noted in the margin

After a very careful consideration of the draft prepared by the Indian Law Commissioners we have arrived at the conclusion that it is not suited to the wants of this country

We have recorded in a separate report the grounds on which this conclusion is based They are in a few words that the Commissioners' draft is not sufficiently elementary for the officers for whose use it is designed, and that it assumes an acquaintance on their part with the law of England which can scarcely be expected from them Our draft, however, though arranged on a different principle from theirs, embodies most of its provisions In general, it has been our object to reproduce the English Law of Evidence with certain modifications, most of which have been suggested by the Commissioners though with some this is not the case

The English Law of Evidence appears to us to be totally destitute of arrangement This arises partly from the circumstance that its leading terms are continually used in different sense, and partly from the circumstance that the Law of Evidence was formed by degree out of various elements and in particular out of the English system of pleading and the habitual practice of the Courts of Common Law For instance the rule that evidence must be confined to point in issue is founded on the system of pleading The rule that hearsay is no evidence is part of the practice of the Courts but the two sets of rules run into each other in such an irregular way as to produce between them a result which no one can possibly understand systematically unless he is both acquainted with the principles of a system of pleading which is being rapidly abolished, and with the everyday practice of the Common Laws of Courts which can be acquired and understood only by those who habitually take part in it This knowledge, moreover, must be qualified by study of text-books which are seldom systematically arranged

App C

Many other circumstances to which we need not refer, have contributed largely to the general results, but we may illustrate the extreme intricacy of the law and the total absence of anything like a system which pervades every part of it, by a single instance. In Mr Pitt Rivers's will on evidence it is stated that 'ancient documents' when tendered in support of ancient possession, form the third exception to the rule which excludes hearsay. The question is whether A is entitled to a fishery. His predecessor a royal grant of the fishery to his ancestor. This fact the law describes as a peculiar kind of hearsay admissible by special exception. Surely this is a language in a most unconstructive manner.

This being the case, we have discarded altogether the phraseology in which the English text writers usually express themselves, and have attempted first to ascertain, and then to arrange in their natural order the principles which underlie the numerous cases and fragmentary rules which they have collected together. The result is as follows—

Every judicial proceeding whatever has for its purpose the ascertaining of some right or liability. If the proceeding is criminal the object is to ascertain the liability to punishment of the person accused, if the proceeding is civil, the object is to ascertain some right of property or of status or the right of one party, and the liability of the other, to some form of relief.

All rights and liabilities are dependent upon and arise out of facts, and facts fall into two classes, those which can, and those which cannot be perceived by the senses. Of facts which can be perceived by the senses it is superfluous to give examples. Of facts which cannot be perceived by the senses intention, fraud, good faith, and knowledge may be given as examples. But each class of facts has in common one element which entitles them to the name of facts—they can be directly perceived either with or without the intervention of the senses. A man can testify to the fact that at a certain time, he had a certain intention on the same grounds as that on which he can testify that at a certain time and place, he saw a particular man. He has, in each case, a present recollection of a past direct perception. Moreover it is equally necessary to ascertain facts of each class in judicial proceedings, and they must in most cases be ascertained in precisely the same way.

Facts may be related to rights and liabilities in one of two different ways.

1 They may by themselves, or in connection with other facts, constitute such a state of things that the existence of the disputed right or liability would be a legal inference from them. From the fact that A is the eldest son of B there arises of necessity the inference that A is by the law of England the heir at law of B and that he has such rights as that status involves. From the fact that A caused the death of B under certain circumstances and with a certain intention or knowledge there arises of necessity the inference that A murdered B, and is liable to the punishment provided by the law for murder.

Facts thus related to a proceeding may be called facts in issue unless indeed, their existence is undisputed.

2 Facts which are not themselves in issue in the sense above explained may affect the probability of the existence of facts in issue, and these may be called collateral facts.

It appears to us that these two classes comprised all the facts with which it can in any event be necessary for Courts of justice to concern themselves so that this classification exhausts all facts considered in their relation to the proceeding in which they are to be proved.

This introduces the question of proof. It is obvious that whether an alleged fact is a fact in issue or a collateral fact the Court can draw no inference from its existence till it believes it to exist, and it is also obvious that the belief of the Court in the existence of a given fact ought to proceed upon grounds altogether independent of the relation of the fact to the object and nature of the proceedings in which its existence is to be determined. The question is whether A wrote a letter. The letter may have contained the terms of a contract. It may have been a libel. It may have constituted the motive for the commission of a crime by B. It may supply proof of an alibi in favour of A. It may be an admission or a confession of a crime, but whatever may be the relation of the fact to the proceeding the Court cannot act upon it unless it believes that A did write the letter, and that belief must obviously be produced, in each of the cases mentioned by the same or similar means. If for instance, the Court required the production of the original when the writing of the letter is a crime there can be no reason why it should be satisfied with a copy when the writing of the letter is a motive for a crime. In short the way in which a fact should be proved depends on the nature of the fact, and not on the relation of the fact to the proceedings.

The instrument by which the Court is convinced of a fact is evidence. It is often classified as being either direct or circumstantial. We have not adopted this classification.

If the distinction is that direct evidence establishes a fact in issue whereas circumstantial evidence establishes a collateral fact evidence is classified, not with reference to its essential qualities but with reference to the use to which it is put, is it paper used to be deprived not by reference to its component elements but as being used for writing or for printing. We have shown that the mode in which a fact must be proved depends on its nature and not on the use to be made of it. Evidence therefore should be defined not with reference to the nature of the fact which it is to prove but with reference to its own nature.

Sometimes the distinction is stated thus. Direct evidence is a statement of what a man has actually seen or heard. Circumstantial evidence is something from which facts in issue are to be inferred. If the phrase is thus used, the word 'evidence,' in the two phrases (direct evidence and circumstantial 'evidence' opposed to each other) has two different meanings. In the first, it means testimony; in the second it means a fact which is to serve as the foundation for an inference. It would indeed be quite correct if this view is taken to say circumstantial evidence must be proved by direct evidence. This would be a most clumsy mode of expression, but it shows the ambiguity of the word 'evidence' which means either

(1) Words spoken or things produced in order to convince the Court of the existence of facts, or

(2) facts of which the Court is so convinced and which suggest some inference as to other facts.

We use the word 'evidence' in the first of these senses only and so used it may be reduced to three heads—(1) oral evidence, (2), documentary evidence,

(3) material evidence.

Finally the evidence by which facts are to be proved must be brought to the notice of the Court and submitted to its judgment and the Court must form its judgment respecting them.

These general considerations appear to us to supply the ground work for a systematic and complete distribution of the subject as follows—

- I Preliminary
- II The relevancy of facts to the issue
- III The proof of facts according to their nature by oral, documentary or material evidence
- IV The production of evidence
- V Procedure

We have accordingly distributed the subject Under these heads, in the manner which we now proceed to describe somewhat more fully.

I—PRELIMINARY

Under this head we have defined "fact," "facts in issue," "collateral facts," "a document," "evidence," "proof" and "proved," necessary inference and "presume." We have also laid down in general terms the duty of the Court.

Of our definitions of "fact," "facts in issue," "collateral facts" and "evidence" we need say no more than that they are framed in accordance with the principles already stated. We may however shortly illustrate the effect of the definition of evidence.

It will make perfectly clear several matters over which the ambiguity of the words as used in English law has thrown much confusion. The subject

App. C. of circumstantial evidence will be distributed into its elements, and will be dealt with thus. The question is whether A committed a crime. The facts are—that he had a motive displayed by statement of his own, for it, that the scene of the crime shows foot marks which correspond with his feet, that he was in possession of property which might have been procured by it, and that he wrote a letter indicating his guilt. On turning to Chapter II, it will be found that all these are relevant facts, either as motive, incident or facts in issue, effects of facts in issue, or conduct influenced by facts in issue. On turning to Chapter III, it will be seen how each of these facts must be proved, namely, the statements displaying motive by the direct oral evidence of some one who says he heard them, the foot marks by the direct oral evidence of some one who says he saw them, the possession of the property by the production of the property in Court, and by the direct oral evidence of some one who had seen it in the prisoner's possession and the letter by the production of the letter itself or secondary evidence of it if the case allows secondary evidence.

So the phrase 'hearsay evidence,' which as the commentators observe is used by English writers in so vague and unsatisfactory a manner, finds no place in our draft, and we hope we have avoided the possibility of any confusion in connection with it. Chapter II provides specially, and in manner which corresponds on the whole (though with some modifications) with the English law in what cases the statements and opinions of third persons as to relevant facts shall, and in what cases they shall not be themselves relevant, and Chapter V on proof by oral evidence provides that oral evidence shall in all cases be direct, on whatever ground the fact which it is to establish may be relevant to the issue—that is to say, if the fact is one which could be seen, it must be established by a witness who says he saw it if it could be heard by a witness who says he heard it whether it is a fact in issue, or a collateral fact. These provisions distribute the different things described by the phrase 'hearsay evidence' in the same way in which the different things described by the phrase 'circumstantial evidence' are distributed by the other provisions.

So our definition does away with a confusion which arises out of the double meaning of the word evidence in the phrases "primary" and "secondary" evidence. Primary evidence sometimes means a relevant fact, and at other times the proof of a document by its production as opposed to proof by a copy. In our draft 'primary' and 'secondary' are distinctly defined, and confined to an unambiguous meaning. "Evidence" in our sense means words spoken or things (documents or not) shown to the Court.

Finally we have substituted for the words 'conclusive evidence' the phrase 'necessary inference.' The phrase 'conclusive evidence is not open to objection on the ground of obscurity or ambiguity, but the word 'evidence' in it means not what we understood by evidence but a fact established by evidence from which a particular inference necessarily follows. Our phrase therefore harmonises with the rest of our draft, whereas 'conclusive evidence' would not.

The definitions of 'proof' 'proved' and 'moral certainty' require some comment. The definition of 'proof' is subordinate to that of 'proved' which is that a fact is said to be proved in two cases, that is to say, when the Court after hearing the evidence respecting it—

- (1) believe in its existence, or
- (2) thinks its existence so probable that a reasonable man ought under the circumstances of the particular case to act upon the supposition that it exists.

This degree of probability we describe as "moral certainty" and we provide that no fact shall be regarded as morally certain unless the evidence is such as to render its non-existence improbable. This is as near in approach as we have been able to make to a distinct equivalent for the phrase reasonable doubt, which is usually employed by English Judges in hearing questions of fact to jury. The question 'when is doubt reasonable' is one which cannot be completely answered for at bottom it is a question, not of science but of prudence, and our definition of the word 'proved' is meant to make this plain. We have, however, attached to it the negative condition that a reasonable man ought not to be morally certain of a conclusion, merely because it is probable, if other conclusions are also probable. It is easier to illustrate this principle than to state, without a prolonged abstract discussion which would be out of place on the present occasion the general grounds on which it rests. Our illustrations are meant to point out to judges that they are not to convict A of an offence which must have been committed either by him or by B, unless circumstances exist which make it improbable that the offence was committed by B. We have not attempted to carry the matter further. We believe that in all countries, and in this country more than in any other it is absolutely necessary to leave to judges a wide discretion as to the risk of error which they choose to incur in coming to a decision, and that this is a matter of prudence and practice, as to which rules ought to be laid down, rather with a view of guiding than with a view of fettering discretion.

The last provision, in the preliminary part, to which we would call attention, defines in very general terms the duty of the Court in deciding questions of fact. Its generality appeared to us to render the preliminary rather than the concluding chapter, the proper place for it. This section declares that the duty of the Court is to determine question of fact by drawing inferences—

- (1) from the evidence given to the facts alleged to exist,
- (2) from facts proved to facts not proved,
- (3) from the absence of evidence which might have been given
- (4) from the admissions and conduct of the parties, and generally from the circumstances of the case

We have said nothing of the principle on which these inferences are to be drawn, as that is a matter of logic and does not belong specially to the subject of judicial evidence, but we wish to point out and put distinctly upon record the fact that to infer, and not merely to accept or register evidence is in all cases the duty of the Court. One of the many fallacies which owe their origin to the ambiguity of the word "evidence," and the looseness with which it is used, is the common assertion that direct evidence leaves no room for inference, whereas indirect or circumstantial evidence does. In fact, all evidence whatever is useful only as to the ground work for inferences, of which the inference that the facts which the witness alleges to exist, do or did actually exist, is very often the most difficult to draw. The truth is that to infer in one or other of the different shapes which we have stated is the great duty of the Judge in every case whatever, and we have thought it desirable to point this out in the plainest and broadest way.

We have added two qualifications only to this general rule: (1) that, when the law declares an inference to be necessary, the Court shall draw it, and shall not allow its truth to be contradicted, (2) that, when the law directs the Court to presume a fact it shall infer its existence till the contrary appears. We have treated in detail of necessary inference and presumptions in other parts of the Bill.

II THE RELEVANCY OF FACTS

We have already pointed out the place which in our opinion belongs to this subject in the law of evidence. The questions what facts may you prove obviously lies at the root of the whole matter, and unless a plain and full answer is given to the question it is impossible to state the law systematically. The answer to the question is, we think, to be found in several of the wide exceptions which are made by English text writers to the wide exclusive rules—that evidence must be confined to the point in issue, that hearsay is no evidence and that the best evidence must be given, though other parts of the same exceptions are to be found in different branches of the law. We think, however, that by a comparison and collection of these exceptions we have succeeded in forming a collection of positive rules as to the relevancy of facts to the issue, which will admit every fact which a rational man could wish to have before him in investigating any question of fact.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

These rules declare to be relevant—

- (1) all facts in issue
  - (2) all collateral facts which
    - (a) form part of the same transaction,
    - (b) are the immediate occasion, cause or effect of fact in issue,
    - (c) show motive preparation or conduct affected by a fact in issue,
    - (d) are necessary to be known in order to introduce or explain relevant facts,
    - (e) are done or said by a conspirator in furtherance of a common design,
    - (f) are either inconsistent with any fact in issue or inconsistent with it, except upon a supposition which should be proved by the other side, or render its existence or non existence morally certain, according to the definition of moral certainty given above
    - (g) affect the amount of damages in cases where damages are claimed,
    - (h) show the origin or existence of a disputed right or custom,
    - (i) show the existence of a relevant fact forming a part or
    - (j) show the existence of a series of which a given course of business
    - (k) show the existence of the existence of a given course of business
    - (l) show (in certain cases) the existence of a relevant fact forming a part or
- The remainder of the chapter throws into a positive shape what in English law forms the exceptions of the rule, excluding the various matters described as hearsay. They relate to—

- the conduct of the parties on previous occasions
- the statement of the parties on previous occasions,
- previous judgments,
- statements of third persons,
- opinions of third persons

1 In reference to the conduct of the parties on previous occasions we embody in three sections the existing law of England as to evidence of character, with some modifications. We include under the word "character" both reputation and disposition and we permit evidence to be given of previous convictions against a prisoner for the purpose of prejudicing him. We do not see why he should not be prejudiced by such evidence, if it is true.

2 Under the head of the statement of the parties on other occasions we deal with the question of admissions, as to which we have not materially altered the existing law.

We have not thought it necessary to transfer from their present position in the Code of Criminal Procedure the rules as to confession made to the Police. This appears to us to be a special matter relating rather to the discipline of the Police than to the principles of evidence.

3 Previous judgments appear to follow naturally upon previous statements. Under this head we deal with the question of res judicata.

We have not attempted to deal with the question of the bar of suits by previous judgments between the same parties. This is a question of procedure rather than of evidence and will be properly dealt with whenever the Code of Civil and Criminal Procedure are re-enacted. We have on the other hand dealt in substantial accordance with the principles of the law of England with the question of the relevancy of judgment between strangers. For the sake of simplicity and in order to avoid the difficulty of defining or enumerating judgments in rem we have adopted the statement of the law of Su Barnes Peacock in Kunya Lal v. Hadia Chawan 7 Smith W R 339.

4 As to statements by third persons. We have made one considerable alteration in the existing law by admitting generally statements made by third persons about relevant facts if attended by conduct which confirms their truth or if they refer to facts independently proved. We have given several illustrations of this the strongest of which is suggested by Mr Pitt Taylor. A Captain about to sail on a voyage carefully examines the ship declares his belief that she is a worthy and embarks on her with his family and property uninsured. Statements of this sort are surely most unlikely to be false Evidence of such statements will be admissible under this section, whether the person who makes them is living or dead, producible or not. Some of them would probably be admissible under the English rule which admits statements explanatory of conduct, but as the conduct explained must be relevant, and as no clear definition of relevancy is given by the law of England, it is very difficult to say how far his rule extends.

The next exception refers to statements made by a person who is dead or cannot be found or produced without unreasonable delay or expense. We declare such statements to be relevant if they relate to the cause of the person's death, or were made in the ordinary course of business, or express an opinion as to the existence of the public right, or state the existence of any relationship as to which the party had special means of knowledge, or when they are made in family pedigrees, titles, deeds, etc. We have omitted the restrictions placed by the law of England on the admission of dying declarations and statements about relationship and as to the necessity that statements should be opposed to the pecuniary interest of the party making them, on the ground that they ought to affect the weight rather than the admissibility of what is at best to use Bentham's expression, "make shift evidence."

We also provide for the admissibility of statements in public or official book (and in certain cases) of evidences given in previous judicial proceedings.

5 The cases in which the opinion of third persons are relevant are dealt with in sections forty four to fifty.

They declare to be relevant, the opinions of experts, opinion as to handwriting, opinion as to usages, and opinions as to relationship and the grounds of such opinions.

This completes that part of the Bill which relates to the relevancy of facts. In the particulars stated and in some others of minor importance, which for the sake of brevity we have not noticed, it modifies the law of England, but we believe that, substantially, it represents that part of the law which is contained in (amongst others) the rules, together with the exceptions to the rules that evidence must be confined to points in issue, that the best evidence must be given, and that hearsay is no evidence though these rules include other matters which we treat of under other heads.

III—PROOF

The second Chapter having decided what facts are relevant we proceed to show how a relevant fact is to be proved.

In the first place, the fact to be proved may be one of so much notoriety that the Courts will take judicial notice of it, or it may be admitted by the parties. In either of these cases no evidence of its existence need be given. Chapter III which relates to judicial notice disposes of this subject. It is taken in part from Act II of 1855, in part from the commissioners' draft bill and in part from the law of England.

If evidence has to be given of any fact that evidence must be either oral documentary or material, and we proceed in the following chapters to deal with the peculiarities of each of these three kinds of evidence. There is, however, one topic which applies to all of them, of which we treat in Chapter IV. This is the distinction between primary and secondary evidence. As we have already shown, the phrase is ambiguous. We regard it as a legal way of recognizing the obvious principle that the best way of finding out the contents of a document is to read it yourself and we have accordingly defined primary and secondary evidence thus: in the case of documents or other material things the document or thing itself is primary evidence. A copy, model, or oral description is secondary evidence. In all other cases, oral evidence is primary.

We next proceed (Chapters V, VI VII and VIII) to the question of proof by the various kinds of evidence successively, namely oral documentary and material. With regard to oral evidence we provide, that it must in all cases whatever, whether it is primary or secondary, and whether the fact to be proved is a fact in issue or collateral be direct. That is to say if the fact to be proved is one that could be seen, it must be proved by some one who

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

App. C. says he saw it. If it could be heard, by some one who says he heard it, and so with the other senses. We also provide that, if the fact to be proved is the opinion of a living and producible person, or the grounds on which such opinion is held, it must be proved by the person who holds that opinion on those grounds.

We have, however, provided that if the fact to be proved is the opinion of an expert who cannot be called (which is the case in the majority of cases in this country) and if such opinion has been expressed in any published treatise it may be proved by the production of the treatise.

This provision taken in connection with the provisions or relevancy contained, in Chapter II, will we hope, set the whole doctrine of hearsay in a perfectly plain light, for their joint effect is this—

- (1) the sayings and doings of third persons are as a rule irrelevant so that no proof of them can be admitted
- (2) in some excepted cases they are relevant,
- (3) every act done or words spoken which is relevant on any ground, must (if proved by oral evidence) be proved by some one who saw it with his own eyes or heard it with his own ears

With regard to the Chapters which relate to the proof of facts by document ary evidence, and in cases in which secondary evidence may be admitted we have followed, with few alterations the existing law. We may observe that Chapter VII contains most of the presumptions which we have thought it right to introduce into the Bill. They are presumptions which in almost every instance will be true—as to the genuineness of certified copies, gazettes, books purporting to be published at particular places, copies of depositions, etc.

We have inserted a few provisions in Chapter VIII as to material evidence. They reproduce the practice and as we believe the law of England upon this subject though no distinct provisions about it and few judicial decisions upon it are so far as we are aware, to be found in English law books.

On the subject of the exclusion of oral evidence of a contract, etc. reduced to writing we have (in Chapter IX) simply followed the law of England and the commissioners draft.

IV THE PRODUCTION OF PROOF

From the question of proof of facts, we pass to the question of the manner in which the proof is to be produced, and this we treat under the following head—

The burden of proof (Chapter X)

Witness (Chapter XI)

The administration of oaths (Chapter XII)

Examination of witnesses (Chapter XIII)

With regard to the burden of proof, we lay down the broad rules that the general burden of proof is on the party who if no evidence at all were given, would fail and that the burden of proving any particular fact is on the party who affirms it. These are the well established English rules and appear to us reasonable in themselves. We have not followed the precedent of the New York Code in laying down a long list of presumptions agreeing with the direction of the Judges. We have however admitted one or two such presumptions to a place in the code as in the absence of an express rule, the Judges might feel embarrassed. These are—the presumption of death from seven years disappearance and the presumption of partnership from the fact of actings partners.

We may observe that we have disposed, in an illustration, of a matter in which the laws of several countries contain elaborate and we think somewhat arbitrary provisions to be made in the case of the death of several persons in a common catastrophe. We treat it as an instance of the rule as to the burden of proof. The person who affirms that A died before B must prove it. This is the principle adopted by the English Courts.

We follow the English law as to legitimacy being a necessary inference from marriage and cohabitation and we adopt one or two of the rules of English law as to estoppel.

In this chapter as to the examination of witnesses we have been careful to interfere as little as possible with the existing practice of the Courts which in the Mofussil Courts and under the Code of Civil Procedure, is of necessity very loose and much guided by circumstances, but we have put into propositions the rules of English law as to the examination and cross examination of witnesses.

We have also considered it necessary, having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this country to put into the hands of the Judge an amount of discretion as to the admission of evidence which, if it exists by law is at all events rarely or never exercised in England. We expressly empower him to ask any questions upon any facts relevant or irrelevant at any period of the trial and we expressly declare that it is his duty in criminal cases if he thinks that the public interest requires it, not merely to receive and adjudicate upon the evidence submitted to him by the parties but also to enquire to the utmost into the truth of the matter before him. The object of these provisions is to define simply and clearly the duties and the position of the Judges and those who practice before them. The English system under which the Bench and the Bar act together and play their respective parts independently and the professional organisation on which it rests, have no doubt great advantages, but in this country such a system does not as yet exist, and will not for a very long course of time be introduced. In the mofussil, generally speaking the great mass of cases are conducted without the assistance of a Bar, and when advocates are employed there they are usually brought from a distance and have to appear before Judges who have not had the same professional training as English Judges and are liable to be intimidated by advocates whose technical knowledge of law is greater than their own, and to whom the extremely intricate system of appeal which prevails in this country gives a power over the Judges unlike anything which exists in England. For this reason we have thought it necessary to strengthen the hands of the Judges and to enable them to act efficiently and promptly as the representatives of the public interest.

In connection with this subject we may refer to some provisions which we have inserted in order to prevent the abuse of the power of cross examination to credit. We believe the existence of that power to be essential to the administration of justice and we believe it to be liable to great abuses. The need for the power and danger of its abuse are proved by English experience, but in this country litigation of various kinds and criminal prosecutions in particular are the great engines of malignity and it is accordingly even more necessary here than in England both to permit the exposure of corrupt motives and to prevent the use of the power of exposure as a means of gratifying malice. We have accordingly provided as follows.

Such questions may relate either to matters relevant to the case, or to matters not relevant to the case. If they relate to matters relevant to the case we think that the witness ought to be compellable to answer, but that his answer should not afterwards be used against him.

If they relate to matters not relevant to the case except in so far as they affect the credit of the witness we think that the witness ought not to be compelled to answer. His refusal to do so would in most cases, serve the purpose of discrediting him, as well as an express admission that the imputation conveyed by the question was true.

In order to protect witnesses against needless questions of this kind we enact that any advocate who asks such questions without written instructions (which the Court may call upon him to produce, and may impound when produced) shall be guilty of a contempt of Court, and the Court may record any such question, if asked by a party to the proceedings. The records of the question of the written instructions are to be admissible as evidence of the publication of an imputation intended to harm the reputation of the person affected, and such imputations are not to be regarded as privileged communications, or as falling under any of the exceptions to section four hundred and ninety nine of the Indian Penal Code merely because they were made in the manner stated. Upon a trial for defamation it would of course be open to the person accused to show, either that the imputation was true or that it was for the public good that imputation should be made (Pt I, section 449, I P C), or that it was made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it or of any other person (Pt 9). This is the only method which occurs to us of providing at once for the interests of a bona fide questioner and an innocent witness.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

App. C.

In the same spirit we have empowered the Court, in general terms, to forbid indecent and scandalous inquiries unless they relate to facts in issue as defined above or to matters absolutely necessary to be known in order to determine whether the facts in issue existed, and also to forbid questions intended to insult or annoy.

We prefer this general power to the sections drawn by the Commissioners, which forbid questions to married persons "which substantially amount to inquiring whether that person has had sexual intercourse forbidden to him or her by the law to which he or she is subject, and questions regarding the occurrence of sexual intercourse between a husband and wife except in the case of Christians, where the suit is for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of bodily incapacity." We should regard these rules as dangerous. It is possible to imagine numerous cases in which it might be highly important to show that a married person was living with some one who was not her husband or his wife. A woman brings a false accusation against her servant. The motive is revenge for the discovery by the servant of an intrigue by the mistress. A married man comes to prove in alibi on behalf of his mistress. A woman sues a married man on a bond. He pleads that consideration was adultery. In all these cases and so in many others which might be suggested it appears to us that it would be absolutely necessary to admit such evidence as is referred to. As to questions relating to sexual intercourse between husband and wife we think it better to forbid indecent and scandalous inquiries in general terms than to lay down a positive rule which in possible cases might produce hardship.

Finally we deal (Chapter XV) with the question of the improper admission or rejection of evidence.

We provide in substance that in regular appeals each Court successively shall decide for itself to what evidence it will have regard. As for special appeals we provide that if evidence is said to be improperly admitted, the objection must be taken before the inferior Appellate Court, and the Court called upon to say what its decisions would be if the evidence objected to were rejected. If evidence is improperly rejected we would permit the High Court either to look into the facts and deliver final judgment or to remand the case.

Finally, we recommend that the Draft Bill together with the report should be circulated for the opinion of the Local Governments.

J F STEPHEN
J STRACHY
F S CHAPMAN
F R COCKRELL
J F D INGLIS
W ROBINSON

The 31st March, 1871

ABSTRACT of the Proceedings of the Council of the Governor General of India assembled for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations under the provisions of the Act of Parliament 24 & 25 Vict Cap 67 App

The Council met at Government House on Friday the 31st March, 1871

PRESENT

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India K P G M S I presiding

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal

His Excellency the Commander-in-chief C I I , C C S I

The Hon'ble John Strachey

The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple,

K C S I

The Hon'ble J Fitzjames Stephen Q C

The Hon'ble B H Ellis

Major General The Hon'ble H W

Norman C B

Colonel the Hon'ble R Strachey, C S

The Hon'ble F S Chapman

The Hon'ble J R Bullen Smith

The Hon'ble F R Cockerell

The Hon'ble J F D Inglis

The Hon'ble W Robinson, C S I

INDIAN EVIDENCE BILL

The Hon'ble Mr Stephen in presenting the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence said —

"My Lord—I feel that I owe an apology to Your Lordship and the Council for requesting their attention to a second speech upon a purely legal subject after the one which I delivered a week ago, upon the Limitation Act. On this occasion, however, I have to explain the position of a measure perhaps as important as any that has been passed of late years by the Indian Legislature, in as much as, if it becomes law, it will affect the daily administration of both Civil and Criminal Procedure throughout the whole country. Moreover the subject matter to which the Bill refers is one of deep and wide general interest, for a law of Evidence properly constructed would be nothing less than an application of the practical experience acquired in Courts of Law, to the problem of enquiring into the truth as to controverted questions of fact, however, imperfectly it may have been attained.

"This is the object which has been kept in view in framing the Bill which the committee append to their report, and which I am now to describe in a general way to your Lordship and the Council.

"I will state in the first place, the history of the measures down to the present time. So far back as the year 1868, the Indian Law Commissioners drew a draft Evidence Act which was sent out to his country, and introduced and reposed to a Select Committee, by my friend and predecessor Mr Maine. The Bill was circulated for opinion to the Local Governments, and was pronounced by every legal authority to which it was submitted, to be unsuitable to the wants of this country. In this view the committee concur for reasons which I need not state in detail on the present occasion as they are fully stated in the report which I present to day. I may observe in general however that the principal reasons were, that the bill was not sufficiently elementary, that it was in several respects incomplete, and that, if it became law, it would not supersede the necessity under which judicial officers in his country are at present placed, of acquainting themselves by means of English Law books with the English Law upon this subject.

"The Commissioners' Draft, indeed would hardly be intelligible to a person who did not enter upon the study of it with a considerable knowledge of the English Law. Under these circumstances, a new draft was framed which we now propose to print and circulate and on which I hope to receive the opinions of the Local Governments and High Courts, in the course of the summer lay by next September so that their criticisms may be deliberately weighed, and the measure may be finally disposed of, by this time next year.

"The report of the committee explains very fully the scheme of the Bill, which of course is of considerable, though not I hope unwieldy length, and enters fully into the reasons which have led us to adopt its leading provisions,

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

App C I will not worry the council by going into all these questions on the present occasion. I will confine myself to saying that I trust that those who will have to criticise the Bill will by studying the report which has been drawn up with great care and which, as well as the Bill itself, forms a connected and systematic whole. The general object kept in view in framing the Bill has been to produce something from which a student might derive a clear comprehensive and distinct knowledge of the subject, without unnecessary labour but not of course, without that degree of careful and sustained attention which is necessary in order to master any important and intricate matter. It is by this standard that the committee in general and I in particular as the member in charge of the Bill desire that it may be tried.

With this reference to the Bill and the report of the committee, I proceed to discuss the general questions connected with the subject and to mention a few of the leading features of the measure.

I suppose that I may assume as generally admitted the necessity which exists for legislation on the subject of evidence in British India. It would be exceedingly difficult to say precisely what at the present moment the law upon the subject certainly is. To some extent—it is far from being clear to what extent—and in some parts of this country—the English Law of Evidence appears to be in force in British India. Whatever may be the thing it both is and will continue to be so in practice. For if the English Law of Evidence has not been introduced into this country English lawyers and quasi lawyers have, and they have been directed to decule according to the law of justice equity and good conscience. Practically speaking these attractive words mean little more than an imperfect understanding of imperfect collections of not very recent editions of the English text books. It is difficult to imagine anything much less satisfactory than such a state of law as this. A good deal may be said for an elaborate legal system well understood and strictly administered. A good deal may be said for unaided mother wit and natural shrewdness, but a half and half system in which a vast body of half understood law, totally destitute of arrangement and of uncertain authority maintains a dead alive existence is a state of things which it is by no means easy to praise.

Legislation being thus necessary in what direction is legislation to proceed? A gentleman for whose opinion upon all subjects connected with Indian Law and Legislation I in common with most other people have a profound respect said to me the other day in discussing this subject—“My Evidence Bill would be very short one. It would consist of one rule to this effect—All rules of evidence are hereby abolished. I believe that the opinion thus vigorously expressed is really held by a large number of persons who would not avow it so plainly. There is in short in the lay world including in the expression the majority of Indian Civilians an impression that rules of evidence are technicalities invented by lawyers principally for what Bentham called fee gathering purposes and of no real value in the investigation of truth. I cannot admit that this impression is in any degree correct. I believe that rules of evidence are of very great value in all degree correct. I believe that and in particular in enquiries for judicial purposes and that it is practically impossible to investigate difficult subjects without regard to them.

“It is worth while to illustrate this point a little because the necessity for rules of evidence rests upon it, but strong proof of it is to be found in the fact that in all ages and countries there have been rules of evidence. In rule times and amongst primitive people the task of arriving at the truth as to matters of fact was regarded as so helpless and difficult, that rude arbitrary substitutes for any sort of rational procedure were provided in the shape of ordeals and judicial combats. When people began to obtain glimpses of the true methods of investigation they seem to have considered as almost supernatural skill what in our days fall within the scope of average police officers or attorney's clerk. The delighted wonder which was displayed by the Jews according to the apocryphal story of Susannah and the wonders at what a friend of mine used to call that very feeble cross-examination of Daniels about the trees is a good instance of this. At a later period arbitrary rules of evidence began to be formed. Such a fact must be proved by two eye-witnesses, such another by four, such another by seven. To say nothing of European systems, in which such rules were in force the Hedaya is full of them. These rules were never introduced in their full force into England, but the system which was adopted or rather which grew up by degrees was of a very mixed and exceedingly singular character. Part of it consisted of rules declaring large classes of witnesses to be incompetent. Part was intimately connected with the English system of special pleading, which was so contrived as to define with extreme precision the facts upon which the parties differed or were as the phrase goes, at issue. Parts were the result of the practical experience of the Courts, and these were by far the most valuable portion, in my opinion of the English law of evidence. Most of the other rules have indeed been cut away by legislation and the rules which still remain may fairly be taken to be the net result of English judicial experience in modern times. In the most general terms these rules are —

- (1) that evidence must be confined to the issue
- (2) that hearsay is no evidence
- (3) that the best evidence must be given,
- (4) rules as to confessions and admissions
- (5) rules as to documentary evidence

"I have two general remarks to make upon them. The first is that they are sound in substance and eminently useful in practice, and that when properly understood they are calculated to afford invaluable assistance to all who have to take part in the administration of justice.

"The second is that I believe that no body of rules upon any important subject were ever expressed so loosely, in such an intricate manner, or at such intolerable length.

"It is necessary to prove the first of these propositions in order to justify the recommendations of the committee that the substance of the rules in question should be introduced in the form of express law into this country. It is necessary to prove the second proposition in order to justify the attempt made in the Bill to reduce the rules to order and system. First, then as to the proposition that the rules in question are substantially sound and do far more good than harm even in their recent confused condition. The proof of this, I think, is to be found, in a comparison between the proceedings of English Courts of Justice and those of countries which have no such rules and between the proceedings of English Courts in which these rules are, and those in which they are not, understood and acted upon. As a preliminary remark, I think I ought to observe that the knowledge of these rules possessed by English lawyers is derived far more from the daily practice in the Courts, than from theoretical study. Most English lawyers know by habit, almost instinctively, whether this or that (to use the common phrase) is or is not evidence, although they have hardly given the theory of the matter a thought. Practice therefore and not theory, affords the true test of the value of these rules. In fact the clumsy, intricate, ambiguous and in many instances absurd theory by which the rules of evidence are connected together came after the eminently sagacious practice which they were intended to justify and explain. What then is the practical effect of these rules? I may perhaps be permitted to answer this by referring to a book which I published in 1863 on the Criminal Laws of England, and which contains, amongst other things, an analysis of several celebrated trials, English and French. One object of that analysis was to contrast the effect of the presence and absence of rules of evidence, and I think that any one who would take the trouble to compare those trials together carefully, would agree with me in the conclusion, that the practical effect of the English rules of evidence in those cases was to shorten the proceedings enormously, and at the same time to consolidate and strengthen them. Keeping out nothing that a reasonable person would have wished to have before him as material for his judgment. The French system, on the other hand, which dispenses with all rules of evidence, not, at least in those cases, no other result from the want of them, than floods of irrelevant gossip and collateral questions enough to confuse and bewilder the strongest head. Again compare the proceedings of an ordinary Court of Criminal Justice with the proceedings of a Court martial in which the rules of evidence are far less strictly enforced, and less clearly understood. An ordinary criminal Court never gets very far from the point but in a Court martial continually wanders into questions far remote from those which it was assembled to try. Nothing for instance is more common than to see the prosecutor change places as it were with the prisoner, or to mix collateral issues pursued till the Court finds itself engaged in determining, not whether A was guilty of a military offence, but whether I told a falsehood on some perfectly irrelevant subject. In a case which I well recollect I refused against A B, being cross-examined by the mere light of a fact not otherwise relevant to the inquiry. I denied the fact, which B affirmed and made further statements which were contradicted by the immediate letters of the alphabet. No Judge could possibly be expected by the mere light of nature, to know how to set limits to the inquiries in which he is engaged, yet if he does not, an incalculable waste of time and energy, and a great weakening of the authority of his Court, is sure to follow. Active and zealous Advocates who have no rules of evidence to restrain their zeal, would have it in their power to pervert the administration of justice to the basest purposes, and to inflict immense injury on every class connected with it, directly or remotely, this night, or often would in such hands, be made the evenso for trying open old quarrels and reviving questions laid at rest and giving fresh animus to scandals long since exploded and the main question would frequently be lost sight of in a cloud of irritating and useless collateral issues. I may be excused for referring to my own experience at the English Bar in illustration of this. Apperils against orders of affirmation used invariably to produce an amount of excess in any country which I should think it would be difficult to go to session to swear for him or her, as they used to say. No one who did not take part in such cases could imagine the strange ramifications of falsehood and contradiction, into which a hotly contested case of this kind would spread or the number of imputations thrown on the honesty and chastity of the different witnesses, male and female. If it had not been for the rules of evidence the reputations of half the population of the village would have been torn in pieces. The rules of evidence kept matters to a point, and so minimized the evil, but the parties, the witnesses and the attorneys, all appeared to me to be one more anxious than another, to fight the matter out till the very last ray of character had been stripped off the back of every man, woman and child, whose name was in any way brought into the discussion. The French Courts display this evil, in an aggravated form. In the work to which I have already referred will be found an account of the trial of a monk named Leotade for murder. If disposed of under the English rules of evidence, it could hardly have taken more than a day or two at the most. In the French Court it lasted witness in particular, was discovered, to have seduced a girl seven years before, and letters from her to him were read to throw light on his character. One naturally wished to give his own account of the transactions, but was stopped on the ground that a line must be drawn somewhere, and that the Court chose to draw it between the point at which an irrelevant elur had been thrown on his character, and the point at which he been permitted to do so he might have given an equally irrelevant explanation.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

"It is not, however, merely for the purpose of confining judicial proceedings within reasonable limits, that rules of evidence are useful. They are also of pre-eminent importance for the purpose of protecting and guiding the Judge in the discharge of his duty. There is a sense in which it may be said with perfect truth that even legislative power is unequal to the task of abolishing rules of evidence. No doubt it is competent to the Legislature to provide that no rules of evidence shall have the force of law, but unless they expressly forbid all Courts and Judges to act upon any rules at all or to listen to any arguments as to the manner in which they shall exercise the discretion with which they are invested (propositions too absurd to state or to discuss) the Judges infallibly will hear and will be guided by arguments upon the subject, and these arguments will be drawn from the practice of English Courts.

Moreover, the Courts

of appeal will exercise their own discretion in the matter, and thus, by degrees, the system would grow up again in the most cumbrous, chaotic, and inconvenient of all conceivable shapes. The plain truth is, that there is only one possible way of getting rid of the law of evidence and that is by getting rid of the administration of justice by lawyers, and returning to the system of mere personal discretion.

"It may be that some persons would like this policy, but I suppose it is one which I need not discuss.

"So far, I have considered the rules of evidence merely as they conduce to the important practical objects of keeping proceedings to the point, and of protecting and supporting the Judges. I must now say a few words on their value, as furnishing the Judge with solid tests of truth. I fully admit that their value in this respect is often exaggerated and misconceived, but I think that, when the matter is fairly stated, it will be found that they have a real, though it may be described as a negative, value for this purpose. There are two great problems on which the rules of evidence throw no light at all, and on which they are not intended to throw any light, and it must be admitted that those problems are by far the most important of any, which a Judge has to solve. No rule of evidence that ever was framed will assist a Judge in the very smallest degree in determining the master question of the whole subject—whether, and how far, he ought to believe what the witnesses say? Again, rules of evidence are not, and do not profess to be rules of logic. They throw no light at all, on a further question of equal importance to the one just stated. What inference ought the Judge to draw from the facts in which, after considering the statements made to him, he believes? In every judicial proceeding whatever these two questions—Is this true, and if it is true, what then,—ought to be constantly present to the mind of the Judge, and it must be admitted, both that the rules of evidence do not throw the smallest portion of light upon them, and that persons who are absolutely ignorant of those rules, may give a much better answer to each of these questions, than men to whom every rule of evidence is perfectly familiar. I think, that a more or less distinct perception of this coupled with impatience of the exaggerated pretensions which have sometimes been made on behalf of the rules of evidence, are the principal reasons for the distrust and dislike, with which they are at times regarded. This dislike, I think, is merely a particular instance of the vulgar error, which in so many instances leads people to deprecate art in comparison with nature, as if there were an opposition between the two and as if art in all cases did not presuppose and depend upon nature. The best shoes in the world will not make a man walk, nor will the best glass make him see, and in just the same way, the best rules of evidence will not supply the place of natural sagacity, or of a taste for, and training in logic, but it no more follows that rules of evidence are useless as guides to truth than that shoes or glasses are useless as assistances to the feet and to the eyes. The real use of rules of evidence is ascertaining the truth consists in the fact that they supply tests warranted by very long and varied experience as to two great facts, the relevancy of facts to the question to be decided by the Court, and the sort of evidence by which particular facts ought to be proved. They may in the broadest and most popular form be stated thus—'If you want to arrive at the truth as to any matter of fact of serious importance, observe the following maxims—'First if your belief in the principal fact which you wish to ascertain is to be, after all, an inference from the other facts, let those facts, at all events, be closely connected with the principal fact in some one of certain specific modes. Secondly, never believe in any fact whatever, whether it is the fact which you principally wish to determine or whether it is a fact from which you propose to infer the existence of the principal fact, until you have before you the best evidence that is to be had, that is to say, if the fact is a thing done, have before you some one who saw it done with his own eyes, if it was a thing said have before you some one who heard it said with his own ears, if it was a written paper, have the paper before you and read it for yourself.

"This exception—qualifications and explanations apart—is the true essence of the rules of evidence, and I think that no one will deny, either that these

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

App C. rules are in themselves eminently wise, or that they are by no means so obvious and self evident that the mere unassisted natural sagacity of judicial officers of every grade can be trusted to grasp their full meaning, and to apply them to the practical questions which arise in the administration of justice with no assistance from an express law. I do not wish to exaggerate but I must add that I notice considerable moral and speculative value to these rules. If they are firmly grasped by Courts of Justice, and rigidly insisted upon in all practical matters which come before the Courts, they will gradually work their way amongst the people at large, and furnish them with tests by which to distinguish between credulity and rational belief, upon a great variety of matters which will be of vast importance. I ought to add that the good which they are calculated to effect, can be obtained only by erecting them into laws and rigorously enforcing them. When this is done I feel confident that experience will be continually adding to the proper proof of their value.

So far, I have tried to prove the proposition that the English rules of evidence are of real solid value, and that they are not a mere collection of arbitrary subtleties which shackle, instead of guiding, natural sagacity. I pass now to the next proposition which is that these rules are expressed in a form so confused intricate and lengthy, that it is hardly possible for any one to learn their true meaning otherwise than by practice. An inconvenience which may be altogether avoided by a careful and systematic distribution. For the proof of this proposition, if indeed it is disputed I can only refer in general to the English text books on the subject. They form a mass of confusion in which no one can understand until by the aid of long practice, he learns the intention of the different rules of which they heap together innumerable and often incoherent illustrations. I am far from wishing to impute to these compilations the industrious, and in many cases distinguished authors of these compilations. They like all other hand books, are intended for immediate practical purposes, and are mere collections of enormous masses of isolated rulings, generally relating to some very minute point. It was necessary, therefore that they should be arranged rather with reference to vague catch words than which the ends of lawyers are familiar, than with reference to theoretical principles, which it has never been worth any lawyer's while to investigate.

"The condition of the law of evidence as well as the condition of many other branches of the law of England affords continual illustrations of the extraordinary intricacy and difficulty which arises from the combination of the two very greatest practical sagacity with an absence of sound theory, or what is still worse, with the presence of unsound theory. No one who has not seen it could possibly imagine how obscure the meaning of a clever man may become when he is forced to squeeze it into the terms of a theory which does not fit it and is not true. I will give one or two illustrations of my meaning. The expression 'hearsay' is no evidence early obtained is clear enough and what is more true is that when considered as the scientific expression of a general truth from which rules can be deduced in particular cases it is inaccurate faulty and obscure to the last degree. The objections to it are that both 'hearsay' and evidence are words of the most uncertain kind, each of which may mean several different things. For instance 'hearsay' may mean what you have heard a man say and this is its most obvious meaning, but it is difficult to imagine a grosser absurdity than the ascription that no one is ever to prove in a judicial proceeding any thing said by any other person. 'Hearsay' again, may be taken to mean that which a person did not perceive with his own organs of perception but this is not the natural sense of the word and it is almost impossible in practice to direct a witness to that its natural meaning.

"The word evidence is also exceedingly ambiguous. It may mean that which a witness says in Court. It may mean, the fact to which he testifies, regarded as a ground work for further inference. Notwithstanding this the phrase 'hearsay' is no evidence, being emphatic and easy to recollect stuck in the ears and in the minds of lawyers and has been taken by many text writers as the principle on which their statement of the most important branch of the law of evidence is to be arranged. They accordingly took to describing as hearsay, every fact of which evidence was by law excluded, in short, they turned 'hearsay is no evidence' into, that which is not evidence is hearsay. They did not however, do this expressly. They did it by describing as exceptions to the rule excluding hearsay, all cases in which evidence was admitted of anything, which would have been excluded, but for such exceptions. This is so intricate a statement that I can hardly expect the counsel to follow me but I will give one of what I mean. The question is whether a piece of land belongs to A or B. A says that it belongs to him, because his father C bought it from D, who bought it from E and he produces the deeds by which E conveyed the land to D and D conveyed it to C. Now as D and E are not parties to the suit between A and B and as A cannot of his own knowledge know anything of the transaction between them, English text writers call the deed between D and E 'hearsay' and according to Mr Pitt Taylor, the rule which permits such deeds to be given in evidence is the third exception to the rule which excludes hearsay. One of the Judges, if I am not mistaken, called such evidence 'written hearsay', and so indifferent are English lawyers in general, to the abuse of language for the sake of momentary convenience, that it probably never struck him, that this was a contradiction in terms. I think, however, that it is hard to expect people to understand, bear in mind, and follow out in all its ramifications a system, which employs language in such a peculiar manner as to call an ancient deed 'written hearsay'. So talk of hearing a document, is like talking of seeing a sound.

'I now turn to the ambiguity of the word evidence', to which I have already referred. As I have just said, 'evidence' sometimes means a fact which suggests an inference. For instance, it is common to say, — 'Recent possession of stolen goods is evidence of theft,' that is the fact of such possession suggests the inference of theft. At other times and I think more frequently 'evidence' means what a witness actually says in Court, or that which he produces. For instance, we say 'the evidence which he gave was true' I might occupy, I will not say the attention, but the time of Your Lordship and the Council for hours, if I were to attempt to describe the amount of confusion and obscurity which the neglect of this simple and obvious distinction has thrown over the whole subject. I will content myself with observing that it produces the effect of giving a double meaning to every expression into which the word 'evidence' is introduced 'circumstantial evidence', 'hearsay evidence', 'direct evidence', 'primary evidence', 'best evidence' have each two sets of meanings, and the result is, that it is almost impossible to arrive at a clear and comprehensive knowledge of the whole subject, or to see how its various parts are related to each other, without an amount of study, thought, and practical acquaintance with the actual working of the rules of evidence, which few people are in a position to bestow upon the subject.

"I may appear to be detaining the Council unduly upon merely verbal questions but I think that it is a common fault to under rate the importance of accurate language, particularly in regard to the fundamental terms of any particular branch of knowledge. In regard to law, I have not the least doubt that a very large proportion of the intricacy and difficulty which attach to it, is due to the fact, that proper pains have never been bestowed on the definition of its fundamental terms. What could be made of Euclid, if we were not quite sure of our meaning when we spoke of a point, a line, a circle, parallels and perpendiculars? Such a defect would render geometry impossible, and the defect which makes large parts of the law almost unintelligible and beyond all measures cumbrous and unwieldy, is precisely analogous to it in principle. I believe that if its fundamental terms were defined as clearly as the term 'law' was defined by the late Mr Austin, the study of law would become comparatively easy, and in many cases attractive for its own sake, that its bulk might be diminished to a degree of which people in general have hardly any conception, that the expense of its administration might be greatly diminished and that comparative certainty might do away with a very large amount of needless and harassing litigation.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

I shall now proceed to describe, shortly, the principles on which the draft Bill of the committee has been framed. In the first place, we thought it necessary to fix the sense in which the fundamental terms of the subject should be understood, and for that purpose we define, 'fact,' 'evidence,' 'proof,' 'proof' and some other words as to which I will content myself with a reference to the report. It seemed to us that the remainder of the subject would fall under the following general heads—

- 1 The relevancy of fact to the issues to be proved
- 2 The proof of facts, according to their nature by oral, documentary, or material evidence
- 3 The production of evidence in Court
- 4 The duties of the Court, and the effect of the mistaken admission or rejection of evidence

These heads would, we think be found to embrace, and to arrange in their natural order, all the subjects treated of by English text writers and Judges, under the general head of Evidence. I will say a few words on their relation to each other, and on each of them in turn.

The main feature of this Bill consists in the distinction drawn by it between the relevancy of facts, and the mode of proving relevant facts. The neglect of this distinction by English text writers no doubt arises from the ambiguity of the word evidence to which, I have already referred and is the main cause of the extreme difficulty of understanding the English Law of Evidence systematically. I will shortly illustrate my meaning. A says 'Z committed murder.' First of all this is a fact—something which could be directly perceived by the sense of hearing and distinctly remembered afterwards. Now, whether this fact is or is not relevant in a particular case depends upon a variety of circumstances. If the question is whether A was guilty of defaming Z by accusing him of murder? Or where Z had a motive for assaulting A because A said that he had committed murder or if Z is accused of murder, and the object is to show that, when A charged him with it, he behaved as if he were guilty and in many other instances which might be put, the fact that A spoke those words is clearly relevant. But if the question is whether Z actually did commit murder, the fact that A thought so or said so generally speaking is not relevant. Supposing, however that the fact is relevant on some one of the grounds just mentioned or on any other ground what ever be the ground on which the words are relevant to the matter under inquiry, it is obvious that the words themselves ought to be satisfactorily proved, and the rule of English law—and we think it is a wise rule—is that they must be proved by the assertion of some witness who heard them and who has his own ears. They lay down the general rule that they are to be treated as irrelevant to the determination of particular questions and it is necessary to look through a long list of exceptions to that rule, in order to see whether in a particular case, a statement may or may not be proved. If you find that it can be proved the question is how can it be proved? and you propose to prove it by a witness who says that B told him that he heard A say so. Again, you are told hearsay is no evidence, but this expression means not that the fact is irrelevant but that the testimony by which it is proposed to prove the fact is improper. One extreme inconvenience of this is, that the most intricate and inconvenient of all possible forms that of a very wide negative of most uncertain meaning qualified by a long string of intricate exceptions.

No one who has not gone through the process of learning the law by mere rule of thumb practice can imagine the degree of needless obscurity and difficulty upon this point of the existence of which he becomes gradually conscious. It would be perfectly fair to say to almost any English text writer you tell me of enormous length what is not evidence but you nowhere tell me what is evidence, except indeed in large compilations, which point out what has to be proved upon particular issues, and which it is as impossible to read or remember, as it is to read or remember any other mere works of reference.

"I hope that we have been able to avoid this, and that the second chapter of the Bill will be found to state specifically, and in a positive form, what sorts of facts are relevant, as being sufficiently connected with the facts in issue to afford grounds for an inference as to their existence or non-existence. I will not weary the Council by specifying those rules, and I will content myself by referring to the Bill and their report. But I may shortly illustrate them by reference to a passage from a modern historian which will relieve the dullness of a technical speech. The passage to which I refer is a short summary, by Mr Froude, of the grounds on which he believes that Mary Queen of Scots murdered her husband.

"As Mr Froude was not a lawyer he certainly wrote, what I am about to read, without reference to the rules of evidence. I think the fact that he did, in fact, unconsciously observe them, illustrate very strongly the truth of my assertion, that they are nothing more than the result of experience and practical sagacity, thrown into a categorical shape. I need hardly say that I use the passage merely as an illustration, and without any notion of adopting Mr Froude's opinions or asserting the truth of his facts. I am concerned merely with relevance.

'She (Mary) was known to have been weary of her husband, and anxious to get rid of him.

'(By our draft, facts which show motives are relevant)

'The difficulty and the means of disposing of him had been discussed in her presence and she had herself suggested to Sir James Balfour to kill him.

'(Facts which show preparation for a fact in issue, are relevant)

"She brought him to the house where he was destroyed, she was with him two hours before the death.

"(Facts so connected with the facts in issue as to form part of the same transaction, are relevant)

"And afterwards threw every difficulty in the way of any examination into the circumstances of his end."

"(Subsequent conduct, influenced by any fact in issue, is relevant)"

"The Earl of Bothwell was publicly accused of the murder.

'(Facts necessary to be known in order to introduce relevant facts, are relevant)

"She kept him close at her side, she would not allow him to be arrested, she went openly to Setton with him, before her widowhood was a fortnight old. When at last unwillingly, she consented to his trial, Edinburgh was occupied by his retainers. He represented himself at the Tolbooth surrounded by the Royal Guard, and the charge fell to the ground, because the Crown did not prosecute, and the Earl of Lennox had been prevented from appearing."

'(Subsequent conduct influenced by any fact in issue is relevant)

"A few weeks later, she married Bothwell, though he had a wife already, and when her subjects rose in arms against her and took her prisoner, she refused to allow herself to be divorced from him."

'(Subsequent conduct Motive)

"A large part of the evidence consisted of certain letters which the Queen was said to have written. Mr Froude, in passages which I need not read, alleges facts which go to show that she tried to prevent the production, and to secure the destruction of these letters. An illustration as to the subsequent conduct meets the case of a person who destroys or conceals evidence."

"Finally Mr Froude observes 'In her own correspondence, though she denies the crime, there is no where the clear ring of innocence which makes its weight felt even when the evidence is weak which supports the words.

"The letters would be evidence under the section relating to admissions, and Mr Froude's remark is in the nature of a criticism on them by a prosecuting counsel.

App. C

"In English text books, so far as my experience goes, these rules and others of the same sort, are nowhere presented in a compact substantive form. They come for the most part, as exceptions to the rule that evidence must be confined to the point in issue. In fact, they can be learned only by the practice of the Courts though they are as natural and lax as any rules need be, if they are properly stated.

"From the rules which state what facts may be proved, we pass to those which prescribe the manner in which a relevant fact must be proved. Passing over technical matters—such as the law relating to judicial notice, questions to public documents, and the like—these rules may be said to be three in number though of course, numerous introductory rules are required to adopt for practice. They are these:

"1. If a fact is proved by oral evidence, the oral evidence must be direct, that is to say, things seen must be deposed to by some one who says he saw them with his own eyes. Things heard by some one who says he heard them with his own ears.

"2. Original documents must be produced or accounted for, before any other evidence can be given of their contents.

"3. When the conflict has been reduced to writing, it must not be varied by oral evidence.

These rules, as I have said, are subjected to certain exceptions, and require certain practical adjustments, but I do not think that any one who has had practical experience of the working of Courts of Justice will deny their substantial soundness, or indeed the absolute practical necessity for enforcing them.

"Passing over certain matters which are explained at length in the Bill and report, I come to two points to which the committee attach the greatest importance as having peculiar reference to the administration of justice in India. The first of these rules refer to the part taken by the Judge in the examination of witnesses, the second to the effect of the improper admission or rejection of evidence upon the proceeding in case of appeal.

"That part of the English law of evidence which relates to the manner in which witnesses are to be examined, assumes the existence of a well educated, but co-operating with the Judge and relieving him practically of every other duty than that of deciding questions which may arise between them. I need hardly say that the state of things does not exist in India, and that it would be a great mistake to legislate as if it did. In a great number of cases—probably the vast numerical majority—the Judge has to conduct the whole trial himself. In all cases he has to represent the interests of the public much more distinctly than he does in England. In many cases he has to get at the truth, or as near to it as he can, by the aid of collateral inquiries, which may incidentally tend to something relevant, and it is most unlikely that he should ever wish to push an enquiry needlessly or to go into matters not really connected with it. We have accordingly thought it right to arm Judges with a general power to ask any questions upon any facts, of any witnesses, at any stage of the proceedings, irrespective of the rules of evidence binding on the parties and their agents, and we have inserted in the Bill a distinct declaration, that it is the duty of the Judges, especially in criminal cases, not merely to listen to the evidence put before him, but to enquire to the utmost into the truth of the matter. We do not think that the English theories, that the public have no interest in arriving at the truth and that even criminal proceedings ought to be regarded mainly in the light of private questions between the prosecutor and the prisoner, are at all suited to India, if indeed they are the result of any better than carelessness and apathy in England.

"With respect to the question of appeals we have drawn a series of provisions the object of which is to prevent mere mistakes in procedure from destroying the value of work properly done, as far as it goes. We have gone through the various cases in which, as appears to us, the questions of the improper admission or rejection or omission of evidence can arise, and have provided that, whenever any Appellate Court discovers the occurrence of any mistake, it shall not reverse the decision of the inferior Court, but shall either strike out what is redundant, or supply what is defective, as the case may be, and give judgment accordingly. App

I have addressed Your Lordship and the Council at great length, but not, I think at greater length than the importance of the matter requires. I have only to add, that I propose to proceed with the Bill when the Government returns to Calcutta, and that I hope before that time, to receive the criticism of the Local Governments upon the measure.

The council adjourned to Thursday, the 6th April 1871

CALCUTTA,

WHITELEY STOKES

The 31st March, 1871

Secy to the Govt of India

ABSTRACT of the Proceedings of the Council of the Governor General of India, assembled for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations under the provisions of the Act of Parliament, 24 & 25 Vict, Cap 67

PRESIDENT

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India K P C M S I presiding

The Hon'ble John Strachey	The Hon'ble J F D English
The Hon'ble J Fitzjames Stephen, Q C	The Hon'ble W Robinson C S I
The Hon'ble B H Ellis	The Hon'ble F S Chapman
The Hon'ble F R Cockerell	The Hon'ble R Stewart
The Hon'ble J R Bullen Smith

SUNDRY BILLS

The Hon'ble Mr Stephen also moves that the Hon'ble Messrs Chapman, Stewart and Bullen Smith, be added to Select Committees on the following Bills —

The next Bill, to which Mr Stephen had to refer, was the Evidence Bill. He need not say anything more about it than that it was under the consideration of the Committee. He however wished to make one or two remarks. In the first place although the Bill have been sent for the opinion of the Local Governments some time in June last, with a request that their opinion on the subject might be forwarded in the course of the autumn, many of the Local Governments had not yet sent in any opinions whatever on the subject. He earnestly hoped that their opinions might be received in order that they might be fully considered. Some memorial had been received on the subject from individuals, specially from certain members of the Bar. He did not wish to discuss them. But he wished to say that he thought that the opinion of some persons, that the Council in General, and Mr Stephen in particular, were animated by some feelings of hostility against the Bar was perfectly unfounded, and was almost as unnatural and absurd as that His Lordship, the President should be accused of a strong prejudice and dislike against the Civil Service. He was the last person in British India who had any right or any wish to make an attack upon the members of the Bar. Everything that had been said upon the subject of this Bill would receive most earnest and careful attention in a perfectly fair and friendly spirit without the slightest notion of making any attack upon the independence or position generally of the honourable profession in question.

The Council adjourned to Friday, the 15th December, 1871,

CALCUTTA,

H S CUNNINGHAM,

The 5th December, 1871

Offg Secretary to the Council of the Governor General for making Law and Regulation

App. C

SECOND REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE

The Gazette of India, 1 February 1912, Part V P 91

The following Report of a Select Committee together with the Bill as settled by them was presented to the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 30th January, 1872 —

Petition from certain Barristers and Advocates of Bombay, dated the 8th August, 1871

From Officiating Secretary to Chief Commissioner of Coorg No 386
4, dated 4th October 1871, and enclosures

From certain pleaders of the High Court, Bombay, dated 4th October 1871

From Officiating Secretary to Chief Commissioner of Coorg, No 400,
6, dated 9th October 1871, and enclosures

From the Chief Secretary to Government of Fort Saint George No 166 dated 21st November 1871 and enclosures

From F I Fergusson Esq Barrister High Court Calcutta, dated 8th December, 1871 forwarding memorial from Barristers and Advocates High Court, Calcutta

From Secretary to Chief Commissioner, Central Provinces, No 2610
299, dated 6th December 1871 and enclosures

From Officiating Secretary to Government of Bengal, No 6326 J dated 13th December 1871, and enclosures

Memorial from certain members of the Madras Bar, dated 16th December 1871

We the undersigned, the Members of the select committee of the Council of the Governor Genl of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations, to which the Indian Evidence Bill was referred, have the honour to report that we have considered the Bill and the papers noted in the margin

1 We have made some alterations in the arrangement of the Bill

2 We have omitted the definitions of "proof" and "moral certainty" and the sections relating to inferences to be drawn by the Court as being suitable rather for a treatise than an Act

3 We have omitted the provisions relating to material evidence, and have given a new and simpler definition of the difference between primary and secondary evidence

4 We have provided that the Act shall apply to all judicial proceedings but not to affidavits presented to any Court or officer, nor to proceedings in arbitration

5 As to the effect of an admission by one of several persons jointly tried for an offence we have omitted sections 120 and 121 of the original Bill. Instead of these we have provided that when two or more persons are on their trial for the same offence at the same time, and an admission is proved against one of them which affects others of the accused besides himself, it may be taken into consideration by the Court against all the persons whom it affects

6 We have redrawn chapter VI, as to the exclusion of oral by documentary evidence, so as to make the sections more distinct and complete. We believe that they now represent the English law on the subject freed from certain refinements which would not be suitable for this country

7 Exception was taken to the Bill in several quarters on the ground that it did not sufficiently dispose of the matter of presumptions. We have reconsidered this subject with attention, and have provided for it as follows —

Some presumptions have the effect of laying the burden of proof on particular persons, in particular cases. These we have dealt with in sections 103 to 111 of the new Bill

A conclusive presumption is a direction by law that the existence of one fact shall in all cases, be inferred from proof of another. This we have provided for in sections 112 and 113

We have substituted the term 'conclusive proof' in these instances for that of "necessary inference," which was employed for the same purpose in the first draft of the Bill

Other presumptions are in substance mere maxims by which the Court ought to be guided in the interpretation of facts. Theoretically they are regarded in English law in a different light that is to say, as artificial rules which the Court is bound to follow as to the inferences to be drawn from facts. Practically, however, so many exceptions are made that the difference between a presumption of law and a presumption of fact is hardly traceable. The distinction appears to us altogether unsuitable for this country and likely to produce great inconvenience if it were introduced. We have accordingly, by section 111 put all such presumptions in the position of mere presumptions of fact with which the Court can deal at its discretion.

We have provided in the Chapter on the Burden of Proof that a Notification in the Gazette that a territory has been ceded to a Native State shall be conclusive proof of a valid cession at the date mentioned in the notification. The object of this section is to set at rest questions which as we are informed, have arisen on this subject.

The subject of presumptions as to documents is a very special matter, and appears to us to belong to the subject of documentary evidence, under which head we have placed it in chapter V.

Lastly many subjects are treated by English writers under the head of presumptions which appear to us to belong rather to different branches of the substantial law, e.g., the presumption that every one knows law is in reality a branch of substantive criminal law. We have omitted such presumptions as these from the law of evidence, because they do not belong to the subject and because many of them are fictitious.

8 The chapter on oaths has been omitted as they form the subject of a separate Bill now under discussion.

9 We also recommend the omission of sections 141 to 143 of the old draft as to questions to be asked by barristers or pleaders and the substitution of provisions showing the principles by which the asking of such questions, should be regulated, and empowering the Court, if any such question is improperly asked to report the circumstance to the authority to which the person asking it is subject.

10 We have amended the wording of section 166 as to the Judge's power to ask questions. The section as originally drawn might have been taken to authorize him to found his judgment upon irrelevant matter, such as loose rumours. The intention of the section was to give him the fullest possible power of inquiry for the discovering of relevant matter. Section 164 as now drawn makes this clear.

11 We have omitted the chapter as to the duties of Judges, and Jurors, which will we think, be more properly placed in the Code of Criminal Procedure. We have also omitted the provisions as to appeal in the first draft, and have substituted for them section 57 of Act II of 1855 which provides for the cases in which the improper admission or rejection of evidence shall be ground for a new trial or a reversal of a decision.

12 Subject to these amendments we recommend that the Bill be passed but we also recommend that the amended Bill be published in the Gazette and that this report be not taken into consideration for a month from the date of its publication.

J F STEPHEN

J STRACHLY

J F D INGLIS

W ROBINSON

F S CHAPMAN

R STEWART

J R BULLEN SMITH

F R COCKERELL

The 30th January, 1872

App C

Abstract of the Proceedings of the Council of the Governor General of India assembled for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations under the provisions of the Act of Parliament, 24 & 25 Vict Cap 67

The Council met at Government House on Tuesday, the 12th March, 1872

PRESENT

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, &c, presiding

His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal

His Excellency the Commander in Chief, G C B, G C S, I

The Hon'ble John Strachey

The Hon'ble J Fitzjames Stephen Q C

The Hon'ble B H Ellis

Maj Genl the Hon'ble W H Norman,

C B

The Hon'ble F R Cockerell

The Hon'ble J F D Inglis

The Hon'ble W Robinson, C S I

The Hon'ble F S Chapman

The Hon'ble R Stewart

The Hon'ble J R Bullen Smith

The Hon'ble Mr Stephen in moving that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence be taken into consideration, said "My Lord—Just a year ago, in submitting the Report of the Committee to the Council I explained at very considerable length the general design and scope of the Bill which they proposed and which is now before the Council for its final decision. I need not revert to what I then said upon the general principles of the subject. My best course I think will be to inform the Council of what has taken place in relation to the Bill since I last addressed them on the subject.

'After a very full and careful reconsideration of its various details, the Bill was published in the Gazette and forwarded to the Local Governments for opinion. It was carefully reconsidered in Committee after the return of the Government to Calcutta. It was published in the Gazette upwards of a month ago, with a report giving an account of the various alterations which had been made in it, and it is now finally submitted for the consideration of the Council. The Committee has fully considered all the papers with which it was favoured, but with one or two exceptions I cannot say that it has received any very considerable help from its critics. The Bengal Government made some important observations, and so did the Madras Government which favoured us with two peculiarly valuable papers, one by the then Advocate General Mr Norton, and the other in form of a letter by the Government itself which had obviously been prepared with the advice and assistance of a very able professional lawyer. We have received no public expression of opinion from any one of the High Courts, except the High Court of Bombay which approved, generally of the Bill but took exception to two of its provisions on minor points. The High Court of Calcutta announced its intention to say nothing at all on the matter. The High Courts of Madras and Allahabad have as a fact, said nothing, and as the Bill has been before them for many months I presume that they do not intend to do so. I have, however the satisfaction of being able to say that most of the Barrister Judges of the High Courts, and three out of the four Chief Justices, have informed me that they approve generally of the Bill and regard it as an important improvement on the existing state of things. The Local Governments, I think, are unanimous in regarding the measure as one which is much needed, and which is so far suited to its purpose as to be both intelligible to persons not legally trained and complete in essential respects.

'Upon this point, I would specially refer to the valuable papers already referred to which have been received from Madras. It is impossible, in reading them, not to see that their authors do not like the Bill. They find every fault they can with it sometimes coming to very minute criticism. I do not in the least complain of this. I only wish the Bill had been criticised more fully in the same spirit, and I readily admit that the critics in question have pointed out many defects which have been, I think, removed. I am entitled to say that such other defects as may still be latent in it have escaped the detection of at least two highly competent, and by no means favourable critics, who have given the matter careful consideration. Upon some of these criticisms I will make a few remarks as I go on. I refer to them now for the sake of showing the importance of the opinions which I am about to read.

‘The letter of the Madras Government says —

‘It is both advisable and possible so to codify the Law of Evidence as to present within the limits of a single enactment a treatise upon that law practically sufficient for ordinary purposes,’ and it then adds — ‘The Draft Bill in its scheme and general arrangement appears to furnish an adequate outline of such a Code’ but it is observed that the Bill ‘in its present state is far from complete.’

‘Mr Norton expresses the same opinion at greater length, and each of these authorities agrees in the statement that the Bill is only a skeleton, which will have to be completed by a greater number of judicial decisions.

‘Mr Norton criticises the Bill, section by section, and in order to show how fully, he has done so, he observes —

‘I have, however, compared it, section by section, with Taylor, Ro-coe, Best and other text writers, with Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes so far as they apply to the subject of evidence, with some of the existing Acts which regulate judicial evidence and such judicial decisions as I have access to illustrating the principles which at present are generally supposed by the profession to obtain in the Courts of India.’

‘He would hardly, I think, have submitted it to a more searching test. Further on he observes —

‘The process by which this Bill has been, in the main, built up, appears to me to have been by following Mr Pitt Taylor’s works on evidence, and arbitrarily selecting certain sections or portions of sections.’

‘He then criticises the Bill in detail, and conclude by saying —

‘Such are the observations that have occurred to me in the most careful study I can give the Bill, and I think that with some omissions, a little rearrangement here and there and considerable extension and enlargement it promises to prove a great step in advance and improvement in the present uncoded Law of Evidence, and likely to afford very valuable aid and facilities to the Mofussil Judges, and all concerned in the practice of the law in the Mofussil.

‘The general result of these criticisms is, that the Bill is good so far as it goes, but it is very incomplete and is composed of scraps of Taylor, on Evidence arbitrarily and much too sparingly selected. I think I owe to the Council and to the public some observations on this matter. I assert that they do the Bill an injustice, that it is very much more complete than its critics allow it to be and that their own writings prove it. I will not do Mr Norton the injustice of supposing that he has intentionally kept back anything of importance which has occurred to him on the Bill. I am therefore entitled to assume that his paper which contains 33 paragraphs and extends over 14 folio pages, refer to all the defects and omissions which his careful study of the subject has brought to his notice. Passing over criticisms of details many of which are no doubt just and have been adopted I find that the only sins of omission with which he charges the Bill are the following—

‘1 —Its provisions as to the effect of judgments are ‘mengre’

‘2 —It does not deal fully enough with the subject of presumptions

He also suggests slight additions to or enlargements upon four sections of very subordinate importance which I will not trouble the council by referring to.

‘The letter from the Madras Government which describes the Bill as ‘far from complete specifies no omission whatever except in reference to the subject of presumptions more of which it affirms, should be included in a Code aiming at completeness.’

App. C

"The charge of incompleteness, then comes to this that the Bill does not deal fully enough with the two subjects of judgments and presumptions. I will refer to those points hereafter, but I wish first with Your Lordship's permission, say a few words on the positive grounds on which I assert that the Bill does form a complete Code, and does deal with every subject which has been dealt by English text writers on Evidence or by English Legislation. This leads me, in the first place to notice the remark that it consists of bits of Taylor on Evidence 'arbitrarily chosen.' There is a certain amount of truth in this charge, about as much truth, and truth of the same kind as there would be by saying that the speech which I am now making is composed of words arbitrarily chosen out of the dictionary. I could hardly mention any English law book in common use which is, or even pretends to be much more than a large index, made up of extracts from cases strung together with little regard as to any other than a very superficial functional arrangement of the subject matter. There is always some one book which is in possession of the field at a given moment because it is more complete than its rivals, and has the latest cases and statutes entered up in it. This position at present is occupied by Mr Taylor's book, as it was occupied before his time by Gilbert Phillips, Starkie and others, and as analogous positions are occupied, in relation to other subjects, by Russell on Crimes, Bullen on Pleading and other works known to all lawyers. To say, however, that the Bill now before the Council consists of bits taken from Taylor, and especially of bits taken 'arbitrarily' is altogether incorrect. In the first place, the arrangement of the Bill, and the general conception of the subject on which that arrangement is based are altogether unlike anything in Taylor or in any other text book on the subject with which I am acquainted. Nowhere in Taylor, nor in Mr Norton's own book on the subject will be found any recognition of the distinction between the relevancy of facts and the proof of facts, or any, even the faintest perception of the extreme ambiguity and uncertainty which as I showed in the observations which I addressed to the Council a year ago have been thrown over the whole subject by the absence of anything like an attempt to define with precision the fundamental terms of the subject, and specially the words 'fact' and 'evidence.' As to the notion that bits of Taylor have been 'arbitrarily put together in the Bill, I will only say that, at a proper time and place, I would undertake to assign the reason why every section stands where it does. Upon the question of completeness, however, I will make this remark. I assert that every principle applicable to the circumstances of British India which is contained in the 1593 royal octavo pages of Taylor on Evidence, is contained in the 167 sections of this Bill, I also assert that the Bill has been carefully compared, section by section with the last edition of Mr Norton's work upon evidence, and that it disposes fully of every subject which Mr Norton treats."

"As to the specific instances of incompleteness which are alleged against the Bill two only are of any importance upon each of them I will say a few words."

The first is, that the Chapter on judgments is meagre. My answer is, that it may appear meagre to those who take their notions of the law of Evidence from works like Mr Taylor's, but that it contains every thing which properly belongs to the subject. Its utter absence of arrangement and classification on every subject is the great reproach of the law of England, and one of the strongest instances of it is to be found in the way in which provisions of an essentially different character are frequently comprised under the same head. I might give many illustrations of this, but the law of evidence I think, supplies more glaring illustrations than any other department of law. Many English writers have treated the subject in such a manner as to make it comprise the whole body of the law. Thus for instance Starkie's Law of Evidence deals with the whole range of the criminal law and of actions for contracts and damages. His book contains not merely rules about hearsay and secondary evidence and the like, but a specification of the sort of facts which it is permissible to prove on a charge of murder or in an action for libel in order to show malice or under the plea of not guilty in such an action. It is obvious that the law of evidence thus conceived would include nearly the whole of the substantive law, and it follows, I think that it is of great importance to draw the line distinctly between what properly belongs to the subject and what does not. It is for this reason that the sections about judgments are drawn in their present form and that certain topics connected with judgments which are often dealt with by writers on evidence, are omitted from the Bill. The subject is very technical, but I will endeavour to explain it in a few words.

App

"The second section of the Code of Civil Procedure enacts that—

"The civil Courts shall not take cognizance of any suit brought on a cause of action which shall have been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they claim."

"The Code of Criminal Procedure enacts that a man shall not be tried again after he has once been acquitted or convicted. It is a matter of great difficulty and intricacy to describe the precise effect of these provisions and to show how they apply to a variety of cases which may arise. Mr Brington's edition of the Code of Civil Procedure contains ten large pages in very small print, of notes of the cases which have been decided on the second section of the Code of Civil Procedure, and a certain number of decisions have been given on the corresponding sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it is because this Bill does not codify those decisions that it is described as meagre. My answer to the criticism is, that the authors of the two Codes in question were quite right in considering the matter as essentially a matter of procedure. It no more belongs to the law of evidence than a thousand other questions which are sometimes connected with it. There are, for instance cases in which insanity excuses an act which, but for its existence would be a crime. If a man defend himself on the ground of insanity, he must give evidence of it, just as he must prove the existence of a judgment barring his antagonist's right to sue if he relies on the rights being so barred, but it appears to me that it would be as reasonable to treat the question of the effect of insanity on responsibility as a part of the Law of Evidence, because in particular cases it may be necessary to give evidence of insanity, and to treat the law as to the effect of a previous judgment on a right to sue as part of the law of evidence because in certain cases, it may be necessary to give evidence of the existence of a previous judgment.

The only questions connected with judgments which do appear to me to form part of the Law of Evidence properly so called, are dealt with in sections 40—41 of the Bill. These sections provide for the cases in which the fact that a Court has decided as to a given matter of fact relevant to the issue may be proved for the purpose of showing that that fact exists. This, no doubt, is a branch of the Law of Evidence, and the provisions referred to dispose of it fully.

"As to the subject of presumptions, my answer to the critics of the Bill is partly to the same effect, though their criticisms were perhaps better founded. I must admit that the Bill as introduced dealt less fully with the subject than was thought desirable on further consideration and some additions to it have accordingly been introduced though the general principle on which the matter was dealt with is maintained. The subject of presumptions is one of some degree of general interest. It was a favourite enterprise on the part of continental lawyers to try to frame systems as to the effect of presumptions which would spare Judges the trouble of judging of facts for themselves by the light of their own experience and common sense. A presumption was an artificial rule as to the value and import of a particular proved fact. These presumptions were almost infinite in number and were arranged in a variety of ways. There were rebuttable presumptions, and presumptions which were irrebuttable. Præsumptions juris et de jure, Præsumptions juris and Præsumptions facti. There were also an infinite variety of rules for weighing evidence, so much in the way of presumption and so much evidence was full proof, a little less was half full and so on. Scraps of this theory have found their way into English law where they produce a very incongruous and unfortunate effect, and give rise to a good deal of needless intricacy. Another use to which presumptions

A

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

1460

App C

"The charge of incompleteness, then comes to this, that the Bill does not deal fully enough with the two subjects of judgments and presumptions. I will refer to those points hereafter, but I wish first with Your Lordship's permission, to say a few words on the positive grounds on which I assert that the Bill does form a complete Code, and does deal with every subject which has been dealt by English text writers on Evidence or by English legislation. This leads me in the first place to notice the remark that it consists of bits of Taylor on Evidence 'arbitrarily chosen'. There is a certain amount of truth in this charge, about as much truth, and truth of the same kind as there would be by saying that the speech which I am now making is composed of words arbitrarily chosen out of the dictionary. I could hardly mention any English law book in common use which is, or even pretends to be, much more than a large index, made up of extracts from cases strung together with little regard as to any other than a very superficial functional arrangement of the field at a given moment because up in it one book which is in possession of the latest cases and statutes entered up in it complete at present is occupied by Mr Taylor's book, as it was occupied before his time by Gilbert Phillips, Starkie and others and as analogous positions are occupied, in relation to other subjects, by Russell on Crimes, Bullen on Pleading and other works known to all lawyers. To say, however, that the Bill now before the Council consists of bits taken from Taylor or in any other text book on the subject with which I am acquainted. Nowhere in Taylor, nor in Mr Norton's own book on the subject will be found any recognition of the distinction between the relevancy of facts and the proof of facts, or any, even the faintest perception of the extreme ambiguity and uncertainty which, as I showed in the observations which I addressed to the Council a year ago have been thrown over the whole subject by the absence of anything like an attempt to define with precision the fundamental terms of the subject, and specially the words 'fact and evidence'. As to the notion that bits of Taylor have been 'arbitrarily' put together to assign the reason why every section stands where it place, I would undertake to show the circumstances of British India does. Upon the question of completeness, however, I will make this remark I assert that every principle applicable to the circumstances of British India which is contained in the 1383 royal octavo pages of Taylor on Evidence is contained in the 167 sections of this Bill, I also assert that the Bill has been carefully compared, and that it disposes fully of every subject which Mr Norton work upon evidence, and that it disposes fully of every subject which Mr Norton

As to the specific instances of incompleteness which are alleged against the Bill two only are of any importance, upon each of them I will say a few words. The first is, that the Chapter on judgments is merged. My answer is, that it may appear merged to those who take their notions of the law of Evidence from works like Mr Taylor's but that it contains every thing which properly belongs to the subject. Its utter absence of arrangement and classification on every subject is the great reproach of the law of England, and one of the strongest instances of it is to be found in the way in which provisions of an essentially different character are frequently comprised under the same head. I might give many illustrations of this, but the law of evidence, I think, supplies more glaring illustrations than any other department of law. Many English writers have treated the subject in such a manner as to make it comprise the whole range of the criminal law and of actions for contracts and torts. This book contains not merely rules about hearsay and secondary evidence and the like but in specification of the sort of facts which it is permitted to prove on a charge of murder or in an action for libel in order to show malice or under the plea of not guilty in such an action. It is obvious that the law of evidence thus conceived would include nearly the whole of the substantive law, and it follows, I think that it is of great importance to draw the line distinctly between what properly belongs to the subject and what does not. It is for this reason that the sections about judgments are drawn in their present form and that certain topics connected with judgments, which are often dealt with by writers on evidence, are omitted from the Bill. The subject is very technical, but I will endeavour to explain it in a few words.

"The second section of the Code of Civil Procedure enacts that—

'The civil Courts shall not take cognizance of any suit brought on a cause of action which shall have been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they claim' "

'The Code of Criminal Procedure enacts that a man shall not be tried again after he has once been acquitted or convicted. It is a matter of great difficulty and intricacy to describe the precise effect of these provisions, and to show how they apply to a variety of cases which may arise. Mr Broughton's edition of the Code of Civil Procedure contains ten large pages in very small print of notes of the cases which have been decided on the second section of the Code of Civil Procedure, and a certain number of decisions have been given on the corresponding sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it is because this Bill does not codify those decisions that it is described as meagre. My answer to the criticism is, that the authors of the two Codes in question were quite right in considering the matter as essentially a matter of procedure. It no more belongs to the law of evidence than a thousand other questions which are sometimes connected with it. There are, for instance, cases in which insanity excuses an act which, but for its existence, would be a crime. If a man defend himself on the ground of insanity, he must give evidence of it, just as he must prove the existence of a judgment barring his antagonist's right to sue if he relies on the rights being so barred, but it appears to me that it would be as reasonable to treat the question of the effect of insanity on responsibility as a part of the Law of Evidence, because in particular cases it may be necessary to give evidence of insanity, and to treat the law as to the effect of a previous judgment on a right to sue as part of the law of evidence, because in certain cases, it may be necessary to give evidence of the existence of a previous judgment.

The only questions connected with judgments, which do appear to me to form part of the Law of Evidence properly so called, are dealt with in sections 40—44 of the Bill. These sections provide for the cases in which the fact that a Court has decided as to a given matter of fact relevant to the issue may be proved for the purpose of showing that that fact exists. This, no doubt, is a branch of the Law of Evidence, and the provisions referred to dispose of it fully.

"As to the subject of presumptions my answer to the critics of the Bill is partly to the same effect, though their criticisms were perhaps better founded. I must admit that the Bill as introduced dealt less fully with the subject than was thought desirable on further consideration and some additions to it have accordingly been introduced, though the general principle on which the matter was dealt with is maintained. The subject of presumptions is one of some degree of general interest. It was a favourite enterprise on the part of continental lawyers to try to frame systems as to the effect of presumptions which would spare Judges the trouble of judging of facts for themselves by the light of their own experience and common sense. A presumption was an artificial rule as to the value and import of a particular proved fact. These presumptions were almost infinite in number and were arranged in a variety of ways. There were rebuttable presumptions, and presumptions which were irrefutable. Presumptions juris et de jure, Presumptions juris and Presumptions facte. There were also an infinite variety of rules for weighing evidence, so much the way of presumption and so much evidence was full proof, a little less than half full and so on. Scraps of this theory have found their way into England, where they produce a very incongruous and unfortunate effect, and add a good deal of needless intricacy. Another use to which presump-been put is that of engrafting upon the Law of Evidence many subjects which in no way belong to it. For instance, there is said to be a conclusive presumption that every one knows the law, and this is regarded as necessary in order to indicate the further proposition that no one is to be punished for breaking a law of which he was ignorant. To my mind this is simply expressing one truth in the shape of two falsehoods. The plain doctrine, that ignorance of the law is no excuse for breaking it dispense with the presumptions and hands the subject over from the Law of Evidence with which it is accidentally connected, to criminal law to which it properly belongs.

App C

I will not weary the Council by going into all the details of the subject, though I could with perfect ease if it would not take too long, answer specifically the remarks of the Malabar Government on this matter. That Government says—

“Sections 102-4 contain three instances of presumptions, selected from a chapter of the Law of Evidence which in Taylor's fills 111 sections. It is difficult to see why any should be inserted when so few are chosen.”

In general terms the answer is this, large parts of Mr Taylor's chapter relate to topics which have nothing to do with the Law of Evidence. Those which are of practical importance are all included in the Bill as it stands (a few were no doubt omitted in the first draft) and they fall under these heads 1st. There are a few cases in which it is expedient to provide that one fact shall be conclusive proof of another, for various obvious reasons—the inference of legitimacy from marriage is a good instance. 2ndly—There are several cases in which Courts would be at a loss as to the course which they ought to take under certain circumstances without a distinct rule of guidance. After what length of absence unaccounted for for instance may it be presumed that a man is dead? The rule is that seven years is sufficient for the purpose obviously, six or eight would do equally well, but it is also obvious that to have a distinct rule is a great convenience. All cases of this kind fall properly under the head of the Burden of Proof, and I think it will be found that the provisions contained in Chapter VII of the Bill provide for all of them. A new section (114) has been added to this chapter, which deserves special notice. Its substance was I think, implied in the original draft of the Bill, but it has been inserted in order to put the matter beyond all possibility of doubt. It is in the following words—

114. The Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business in their relation to the facts of the particular case.

Illustrations

The Court may presume—

(a) that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession,

(b) that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars

(c) that a bill of exchange, accepted or endorsed, was accepted or endorsed for good consideration

(d) that a thing or state of things has been shown to be in existence within a period shorter than that within which such things or states of things usually cease to exist is still in existence,

(e) that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed,

(f) that the common course of business has been followed in particular cases,

(g) that evidence which could be and is not, produced, would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person withholds it

(h) that if a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled to answer by law the answer, if given, would be unfavourable to him,

(i) that when a document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligor, the obligation has been discharged

But the Courts shall also have regard to such facts as the following, in considering whether such maxims do or do not apply to the particular case before them —

As to illustration (a)—A shop keeper has in his till a marked rupee soon after it was stolen, and cannot account for its possession specifically, but is continually receiving rupees in the course of his business

As to illustration (b)—A, a person of the highest character, is tried for causing a man's death by an act of negligence in arranging certain machinery. B, a person of equally good character who also took part in the arrangement describes precisely what was done and admits and explains the common carelessness of A and himself

As to illustration (c)—A crime is committed by several persons A, B and C, three of the criminals are captured on the spot and kept apart from each other. Each gives an account of the crime implicating D and the accounts corroborate each other in such a manner as to render previous concert highly improbable

As to illustration (d)—A, the drawer of a bill of exchange was a man of business. B, the acceptor, was a young and ignorant person, completely under A's influence

As to illustration (e)—It is proved that a river ran in a certain course five years ago, but it is known that there have been floods since that time which might change its course

As to illustration (f)—A judicial act the regularity of which is in question, was performed under exceptional circumstances

As to illustration (g)—The question is, whether a letter was received. It is shown to have been posted, but the usual course of the post was interrupted by disturbances

As to illustration (h)—A man refuses to produce a document which would bear on a contract of small importance on which he is sued, but which might also injure the feelings and reputation of his family

As to illustration (i)—A man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled by law to answer but the answer to it might cause loss to him in matters unconnected with the matter in relation to which it is asked

As to illustrations (j)—A bond is in possession of the obligor but the circumstances of the case are such that he may have stolen it

"The effect of this provision coupled with the general repealing clause at the beginning of the Bill is to make it perfectly clear that Courts of Justice are to use their own common sense and experience in judging of the effect of particular facts and that they are to be subject to no technical rules whatever on the subject. The illustrations given are, for the most part, cases of what in English law are called presumptions of law, artificial rules as to the effect of evidence by which the Court is bound to guide its decision, subject, however to certain limitations which it is difficult either to under stand or to apply, but which will be swept away by the section in question. I am not quite sure, whether, in strictness of speech the rule that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is confirmed, can be called a presumption of law though, according to a very elaborate judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock it has at all events some of the most important characteristics of such a presumption. Be this how it may, the indefinite position in which it stands has been the cause of endless perplexity and frequent failure of justice. On the one hand it is clear law that a conviction is not illegal because it proceeds on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, on the other hand it seems to be also law that, in cases tried by a jury, the Judge is bound by law to tell them that they ought not to convict on such evidence though they can if they choose. How is a Judge sitting without a jury to give how a discretion to that effect and how a High Court is to deal with a case in which he has convicted although he told himself that he ought not to convict, I do not quite understand. At all events, it seems to me quite clear that he ought to be at liberty to use his discretion on the subject. Of course the fact that a man is an accomplice forms a strong objection in most cases, to his evidence, but every one I think, must have

in England is the great cause of the enormous intricacy and technicality of English law on this point. If, in the Tichborne case one single question had been permitted after being objected to, and if the Court had afterwards been of opinion that it had been wrongly permitted then however trifling the matter might have been, the party whose objection had been wrongly overruled would have been by law entitled to a new trial and the whole enormous expense of the first trial would have been thrown away. This never was the law in India nor will it be so now. The result is that the provisions about relevancy will be useful principally as guides to the Judges and the parties and, in particular as rules which will enable the Judge to shut out masses of irrelevant matter which the parties are very likely to wish to introduce. As to the more general question I think that it is possible to give the true theory of the relevancy of facts and if I thought it desirable to enter upon a very abstract matter in this place, I think I could show what this theory is, and how this bill is founded upon it. Be this, however as it may, and taking a view not indeed less practical but more immediately and obviously practical, I would make the following observations. — I am quite aware that relevancy is as His Honour observes, a matter of degree and for that reason the Bill gives definitions of it so wide and various, that I think they will be found to include every sort of fact which has any distinct assignable connection with any matter in issue. The sections which define relevancy are, indeed, enabling sections. Any fact which fulfils any one of the many conditions which they declare to constitute relevancy will be relevant and most facts which have any real connection with the matter to be proved would fulfil several of them. Take for instance, this fact—A man is charged with theft, and it is proved that he was seen running away immediately after the theft with the stolen goods in his hand. This is (1) a fact so connected with a fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction, and is therefore relevant under section 6, (2) it is the effect of a fact in issue, and is therefore relevant under section 7, (3) it is the conduct of a party to the proceeding subsequent to a fact in issue, and is so relevant under section 8, (4) it is a fact which in itself renders a fact in issue highly probable, and is therefore relevant under section 11. This fact, therefore, is relevant under no less than four sections each of which would admit a great number of facts which would not be admitted by the other sections. Indeed, the latitude of the definition of relevancy will be best appreciated by negativing the conditions which the Act imposes. Suppose that you are able to assert of a fact that it is neither itself in issue nor forms part of the same transaction, nor is its occasion cause or effect, immediate or otherwise, that it shows no motion or preparation for it, that it is no fact of the previous or subsequent conduct of any person connected with the matter in question, that it does not explain or introduce any fact which is so connected with the matter in question or rebut or support any inference suggested thereby or establish the identity of any person or thing connected with it, or fix the time of any event the time of which is important, that it is not inconsistent with any relevant fact or facts in issue, and that neither by itself, nor in connection with other facts, does it make any such fact highly probable—if all these negatives can be affirmed I think we may say, without much risk of error, that the one fact has nothing to do with the other, and may be regarded as irrelevant.

1. "I now come to a matter which has excited a good deal of discussion, though it relates to a subordinate and not very important part of the Bill—that which concerns the examination of witnesses by counsel. The Bill as originally drawn provided, in substance, that no person should be asked a question which reflected on his character as to matters irrelevant to the case before the Court without written instructions that if the Court considered the question improper it might require the production of the instructions, and that the giving of such instruction should be an act of defamation subject, of course to the various rules about defamation laid down in the Penal Code. For such question without instructions was to be a contempt of Court in the person asking them, but was not to be defamation.

"This proposal caused a great deal of criticism and in particular produced memorials from the Bars of the three Presidencies. It was also objected to by most of the Local Governments to whom the Bill was referred for opinion. Some of met with instances in which it is practically impossible to doubt the truth of such evidence although it may not be corroborated or although the evidence by which it is corroborated is itself suspicious.

App C

"As I have already observed, I do not wish to trouble the Council with technicalities but I hope this explanation will show that this part of the Bill, in all events, is not incomplete.

"I may observe that many topics closely connected with the subject of evidence are incapable of being satisfactorily dealt with by express law. It would be easy to dilate upon the theory on which the whole subject rests, and the manner in which an Act of this kind should be used in practice. I think, however, that it would not be proper to do so on the present occasion. I have therefore put into writing what I have to say on these subjects and I propose to publish what I have written by way of a commentary upon, or introduction to the Act itself. I hope that this may be of some use to the Civil Servants who are preparing for their Indian career, and to the law students in Indian Universities. The subject is one which reaches far beyond law, for the Law of Evidence is nothing unless it is founded upon a rational conception of the manner in which truth as to all matters of fact whatever ought to be investigated.

"I now turn to criticism made on the Bill by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal who appears to be somewhat dissatisfied with the manner in which the Bill deals with the question of relevancy, which, as he says, is a question of degree.

"The Lieutenant Governor has no doubt that the law clearing up the obscurity now prevailing as to rules of evidence, protecting our Courts from the intrusion of a foreign law of evidence in no way applicable and rendering the Judges in some degree masters in their own Courts will be highly beneficial. His principal doubt is whether it is possible to define by law what evidence is relevant and what is not. He is inclined to think that relevancy is a question of degree, that relevant shades off into the irrelevant by imperceptible degree. It may be that it is easier to decide, in each case, what is substantially material to the issue, or so remote in its relevancy that the time of the Court should not be occupied than to lay down by rule of law what is to be considered relevant and what not. Such rules must not necessarily be somewhat refined and as it were metaphysical. If it were allowed to argue the question whether any piece of evidence is, or is not admissible under such rules, the Lieutenant Governor would fear that the Court might be lost in disputation. If, however, the rules regarding relevancy be treated as merely an authoritative treatise on evidence for the guidance of Judges, which they are to study and follow as well as they can, but that they are not bound to hear objections and arguments based upon it the Lieutenant Governor has no doubt that the rules in the draft are admirably suited to the purpose, and would be extremely useful. It does not seem to him very clear in the draft whether or no counsel are to be entitled to take objection to evidence at every turn and to argue the question is to whether it is or it is not admissible under the evidence rules. It seems of great importance that this should be made clear, for if counsel may object and argue, the Lieutenant Governor certainly has great fear that the arguments regarding relevancy will be endless.

"I cannot altogether agree with these remarks. As to arguments of counsel I do not feel that horror of them which His Honour appears to feel. It is I think, abundantly clear that counsel will be permitted to argue as to the relevancy of evidence and as to the propriety of proof, and I do not see how a law can be laid down at all upon which counsel are never to argue. No one I think, will seriously assert that lawyers as a class are an impediment to the administration of justice or otherwise than an all but indispensable assistance to it, but if they are to exist at all, they must argue as well on evidence as on other subjects. I must, however, observe that every precaution has been taken to prevent useless and trifling arguments. In the first place if the Judge wishes to know about any fact, the relevancy of which is under debate, he can cut the matter short by asking about it himself under section 165. In the second place the mere admission or rejection of improper evidence is not to be a ground for a new trial or the reversal of a decision. The fact that the opposite is the rule in England is the great cause of the enormous intricacy and technicality of English law on this point. If, in the Richborne case, one single question had been permitted after being objected to, and if the Court had afterwards been of opinion that it had been wrongly permitted, then, however trifling the matter might have been, the party whose objection had been wrongly overruled would have been by law entitled to a new trial and the whole enormous expense of the first trial would have been thrown away. This never was the law in India nor will it be so now. The result is that the provisions about relevancy will be useful principally as guides to the Judges and the parties, and, in particular as rules which will enable the Judge to shut out masses of irrelevant matter which the parties are very likely to wish to introduce. As to the more general question I think that it is possible to give the true theory of the relevancy of facts and if I thought it desirable to enter upon a very abstract matter in this place I think I could show what this theory is, and how this bill is founded upon it. Be this, however, as it may and taking a view, not indeed less practical, but more immediately and obviously practical, I would make the following observations — I am quite aware that relevancy is, as His Honour observes, a matter of degree and for that reason the Bill gives definitions of it so wide and various that I think they will be found to include every sort of fact which has any distinct assignable connection with any matter in issue. The sections which define relevancy are, indeed, enabling sections. Any fact which fulfils any one of the many conditions which they declare to constitute relevancy will be relevant and most facts which have any real connection with the matter to be proved would fulfil several of them. Take for instance, this fact—A man is charged with theft, and it is proved that he was seen running away immediately after the theft with the stolen goods in his hand. This is (1) a fact so connected with fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction, and is therefore relevant under section 6, (2) it is the effect of a fact in issue, and is therefore relevant under section 7, (3) it is the conduct of a party to the proceeding subsequent to a fact in issue, and is so relevant under section 8, (4) it is a fact which in itself renders a fact in issue highly probable, and is therefore relevant under section 11. This fact, therefore, is relevant under no less than four sections each of which would admit a great number of facts which would not be admitted by the other sections. Indeed, the latitude of the definition of relevancy will be best appreciated by negating the conditions which the Act imposes. Suppose that you are able to assert of a fact that it is neither itself in issue nor forms part of the same transaction, nor is its occasion, cause or effect immediate or otherwise, that it shows no motion or preparation for it, that it is no fact of the previous or subsequent conduct of any person connected with the matter in question that it does not explain or introduce any fact which is so connected with the matter in question or rebut or support any inference suggested thereby or establish the identity of any person or thing connected with it, or fix the time of any event the time of which is important, that it is not inconsistent with any relevant fact or facts in issue, and that neither by itself, nor in connection with other facts does it make any such fact highly probable—if all these negatives can be affirmed I think we may say, without much risk of error, that the one fact has nothing to do with the other, and may be regarded as irrelevant.

1. "I now come to a matter which has excited a good deal of discussion, though it relates to a subordinate and not very important part of the Bill—that which concerns the examination of witnesses by counsel. The Bill as originally drawn provided, in substance that no person should be asked a question which reflected on his character as to matters irrelevant to the case before the Court without written instructions that if the Court considered the question improper it might require the production of the instructions and that the giving of such instruction should be an act of defamation, subject, of course, to the various rules about defamation laid down in the Penal Code. To ask such question without instructions was to be a contempt of Court in the person asking them, but was not to be defamation.

"This proposal caused a great deal of criticism and in particular produced memorials from the Bars of the three Presidencies. It was also objected to by most of the Local Governments to whom the Bill was referred for opinion. Some of

App. C. the objections made to the proposal, were I thought well founded. It was pointed out, in the first place that the difficulty of obtaining the written instructions would be practically insuperable, in the next place, that the Native Bar throughout the country were already subject of forms of discipline which were practically sufficient, and, in the third place—and perhaps this was the most important argument of all—that, in this country, the administration of justice is carried on under so many difficulties and is so frequently thwarted to purposes of the worst kind that it is of the greatest importance that the characters of witnesses should be open to full inquiry. These reasons satisfied the committee and myself amongst the rest, that the sections proposed would be inexpedient, and others have accordingly been substituted for them which I think will in practice be found sufficient. The substituted sections are as follows —

Questions lawful in cross examination. 146 When a witness is cross examined, he may, in addition to the questions hereinbefore referred to, be asked any questions which tend —

- (1) to test his veracity,
- (2) to discover who he is and what is his position in life, or
- (3) to shake his credit, by injuring his character although the answer to such questions might tend directly or indirectly to criminate him or might expose or tend directly or indirectly to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture

When witness to be compelled to answer. 147 If any such question relates to a matter relevant to the suit or proceeding, the provisions of section 132 shall apply thereto

148 If any such question relates to a matter not relevant to the suit or proceeding except in so far as it affects the credit of the witness by injuring his character, the Court shall decide whether or not the witness shall be compelled to answer it and may, if it thinks fit, warn the witness that he is not obliged to answer it. In exercising its discretion, the Court shall have regard to the following considerations —

- (1) such questions are proper if they are of such a nature that the truth of the imputation conveyed by them would seriously affect the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies
- (2) such questions are improper if the imputation which they convey relates to matters so remote in time or of such a character, that the truth of the imputation would not affect or would affect in a slight degree the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies
- (3) such questions are improper if there is a great disproportion between the importance of the imputation made against the witness's character and the importance of his evidence
- (4) the Court may, if it sees fit draw from the witness's refusal to answer, the inference that the answer if given would be unfavourable

Question not to be asked without reasonable grounds. 149 No such question as is referred to in section 148 ought to be asked, unless the person asking it has reasonable grounds for thinking that the imputation which it conveys is well founded

Illustrations

(a) A barrister is instructed by an attorney or vakil that an important witness is a dakan. This is a reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dakan.

(b) A pleader is informed by a person in Court that an important witness is a dakan, the informant, on being questioned by the pleader gives satisfactory reasons for his statement. This is a reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dakt.

(c) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, is asked a random question whether he is a dakt. There are here no reasonable grounds for the question.

(d) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, being questioned as to his mode of life and means of living, gives unsatisfactory answers. This may be a reasonable ground for asking him if he is a dakt.

150 If the Court is of opinion that any such question was asked without reasonable grounds, it may if it was asked by any barrister, pleader, vakil or attorney, report the circumstances of the case to the High Court or other authority to which such barrister, pleader, vakil or attorney is subject in the exercise of his profession.

151 The Court may forbid any questions or inquiries which it regards as indecent or scandalous although such questions or inquiries may have some bearing on the questions before the Court, unless they relate to facts in issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed.

152 The Court shall forbid any question which appears to it to be intended to insult or annoy, or which although proper in itself appears to the Court needlessly offensive in form.

The object of these sections is to lay down, in the most distinct manner, the duty of counsel of all grades in examining witnesses with a view to shaking their credit by damaging their character. I trust that this explicit statement of the principles according to which such questions ought or ought not to be asked will be found sufficient to prevent the growth, in this country, of that which in England has on many occasions been a grave scandal. I think that the sections so far as their substance is concerned, speak for themselves, and that they will be admitted to be sound by all honourable advocates and by the public. I can not leave the subject without a few remarks on the memorials which the sections originally proposed have called forth from the Bar in various parts of the country. As none of the bodies in question have made any further remarks on the Bill since it appeared in the Gazette in its amended form, about a month ago I suppose that the alterations made in the Bill have removed the objection which they felt to it. I need not therefore notice the parts of their memorials which were directed against the consequences which they apprehended from the sections which have been given up. They contain, however, other matter which I feel compelled to notice. I need not refer to all memorials. The one sent in by the Calcutta Bar was for the most part proper though it contained passages which I think might well have been omitted. The memorial of the Bombay Barristers contains similar passage, expressed more fully and less temperately, and I shall accordingly confine myself to noticing such of their remarks as appear to me to deserve notice.

'I may observe in the first place in general, that I have read in the newspapers and in these memorials much that can only mean that I individually was actuated in drawing this Bill by hostility to the Bar. Indeed, the Bombay memorial says, in so many words that remarks made by one member (meaning I suppose, me) in Council appear to contemplate the extinction of the profession of a Barrister at law in India. In support of this surprising statement they quote, as being open to no other construction, the following words from the report of the Select Committee—

"The English system, under which the Bench and the Bar act together and play their respective parts independently and the professional organization on which it rests, do not as yet exist in this country and will not for a very long course of time be introduced."

'Before I made the remarks which this suggests, let me ask your judgment and the Council whether I charge that I, of all people, wish for the ex-

APP C

tion of the profession of Barristers at law in India, is not upon the face of it absurd? I am myself a Barrister of eighteen years' standing and a Queen's Counsel of four years standing. I believe, that there is no Barrister in British India of whom I should not be entitled to take precedence professionally, if I chose to practise here, and so strong is my connection with my profession, that I am at this moment on the point of resigning one of the most responsible offices which a Barrister can hold, for the purpose of returning to the ordinary routine of professional practice. How is it possible to imagine that a man so situated should be hostile to the profession? When this Bill was introduced I was—as I still am—anxious to do whatever lies in my power to preserve the honour and dignity of my profession and to prevent its good name from being disgraced. For this reason, I elevated what I regarded as an appropriate remedy for a great and crying evil—one with which I have been much impressed by my own observations in England and which is likely to extend in India as the habit of cross-examination becomes more general, and when the rights which a cross-examining advocate has are explicitly defined. The remedy, I will admit was to some extent inappropriate but for merely proposing it for merely recognizing the existence of the evil against which it was directed I am charged with wishing to extinguish my own profession.

The real meaning of the expressions in the report (for which I am fully responsible) was, I think, so plain, that I cannot understand how the memorialists can have ascribed to them a sense which I think they could never suggest to any fair mind. The report said 'The English system, under which the Bench and the Bar act together and play their respective parts independently, and the professional organization on which it rests do not as yet exist in this country and will not for a very long course of time be introduced.'

"Yes," say the memorialist, it does exist to wit, in the Presidency towns. This is as much as if the water works of Calcutta were referred to to contradict a statement about an Empire as large as Europe without Russia, and am told that it is incorrect, because there are three English Courts and three knots of, perhaps, a dozen or so English Barristers, to be found at towns which are in the nature of English settlements. The reason why the statement complained of was not qualified by excepting these towns and Courts was simply that the exception was not important enough to be stated. It would, indeed, have been matter of great indifference to me personally, whether the Bill extended to the High Courts sitting on the original side or not. It is a mistake to make exceptions without a necessity of them but the question, what rules of evidence should apply in the Presidency towns is one of very little real importance. The great and vital importance of the matter lies in the effect which it will have on the administration of justice throughout the country at large. It is framed in order to meet the wants and lighten the labours of district officers by giving them a short and clear view of a subject which has been converted into a sort of professional mystery the knowledge of which was confined to a not of persons specially initiated in it. Now as regards the Mofussil I repeat the expression complained of. I assert that they are absolutely true and state a fact notorious to every one. I say that throughout India generally, nothing like the English system under which the Bench and Bar act together and play their respective parts independently does now exist or can for a length of time be expected to exist. Let me just recall for a moment the nature of that system. In the first place the Bench and the Bar in England form substantially one body. The Judges have all been Barristers and the great prize to which the Barristers look forward is to become Judges.

That is not the case in India nor anything like it. The great mass of Indian Judges are not and never have been, lawyers at all, the great mass of Indian lawyers have no chance or expectation of becoming Judges and many of them have no wish to do so. Even in the Presidency towns, the whole organization of the profession differs from that of England in ways which I do not think it necessary to refer to, but which are of great importance. I may, however, observe that the position of an English Barrister who practices in the Mofussil whether he is habitually resident in the Presidency town or not, is altogether different from that of an English Barrister in his ordinary practice in England. An English Barrister in circuit, and even at the Quarter Sessions, is subject to the whole series of professional restraints and professional rules which do not, and can not apply to practice in the Mofussil in this country. He acts under the eyes of a public which takes great interest in his proceedings, and puts a powerful check upon him. He practices in important cases before Judges whom he feels and knows to be his professional superiors, and to whom he is accustomed to defer. No one of these remarks applies to Barristers from a presidency practising in the Mofussil. The results of this state of things must be matter of opinion. It is impossible to discuss the subject in detail. The Bombay and Calcutta memorialists consider it eminently satisfactory, let us hope they are right. My opinion, of course, is formed upon grounds which it is not very easy to assign and, as it can be of little importance I shall not express it. In any case this Bill can do no harm.

Passing, however, from the case of English Barristers to the case of pleaders and vakils and the Courts before which they practise, I would appeal to every one who has experience of the subject, whether the observations referred to are not strictly true, and whether the main provision founded upon it there—the provision which empowers the Court to ask what questions it pleases—is not essential to the administration of justice here. In saying that the Bench and the Bar in England play their respective parts independently, what I mean is that, in England, cases are fully prepared for trial before they come into Court so that the Judge has nothing to do but to sit still and weigh the evidence produced before him. In India in an enormous mass of cases this neither is nor can be so. It is absolutely necessary that the Judge should not only hear what is put before him by other but that he should ascertain by his own inquiries how the facts actually stand. In order to do this it will frequently be necessary for him to go into matters which are not themselves relevant to the matter in issue, but may lead to something that is, and it is in order to arm the Judges with express authority to do this that section 165 which has been so much objected to, has been framed.

"I have now referred to the main points in the Bill which have been attacked, and as I fully explain the principles on which it was founded more than a year ago, I have only to move that it may be taken into consideration."

The motion was put to and agreed to.

II 5 CUNNINGHAM

Offy Secy to the Council of the Governor General for making Laws and Regulations

CALCUTTA

For 12th March 1872

APPENDIX D

Act II of 1855

An Act for the further improvement of the Law of Evidence

Enacted

Whereas it is expedient further to improve the Law of Evidence, It is enacted as follows —

Act repealed

I Act No. X of 1835 is hereby repealed

II Within the territories in the possession and under the Government of the East India Company, all Courts of Justice and all persons living by law or consent of parties authority to take evidence shall take judicial notice of all Regulations and Ordinances, made before or on the 2nd day of April 1831 by the Governor General in Council of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, by the Governor in Council of the Presidency of Fort St. George or by the Governor in Council of the Presidency of Bombay, and having the force of law in any part of the said territories, and of all laws and regulations heretofore made by the Governor General of India in Council and of this Act and of all Acts and Regulations heretofore made, or hereafter to be made by the Governor General of India in Council constituted for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations whether the same be of a public or of a private nature

III All Courts and persons aforesaid shall take judicial notice of all public Acts of Parliament and of all local and personal Acts declared by Parliament to be public and to be judicially noticed and shall admit as prima facie evidence of any private Act of Parliament any copy thereof purporting to be printed by the King's Printer

IV Every Court shall take judicial notice of its own members and officers respectively, and of their deputies and subordinate officers or Assistants and also of all officers acting in execution of its process and of all Advocates Attorneys Proctors Vakeels Pleaders and other persons authorized by Law to act before it

V All Courts and persons aforesaid shall take judicial notice of the names, titles, and authorities of the persons filling for the time being any one of the following offices in any part of the said territories — Governor General Governor, Lieutenant Governor or Deputy Governor Secretary or under Secretary to Government Commander in Chief, Bishop Member of Council Legislative Councillor Judge of any of Her Majesty's Courts or of any Sadler Court or of any Court of Judicature hereafter to be constituted in the said territories to or in which the powers of any of Her Majesty's Supreme Courts may be transferred or vested

VI Any such Courts and persons aforesaid shall take judicial notices of all divisions of time of the geographical division of the world of the territories under the dominions of the British Crown of the commencement continuation and termination of hostilities between the British Crown, any other state, and also of the existence title and national flag of every sovereign or state recognised by the British Crown In all the above cases, such Court or person may resort for its aid to appropriate books or documents or reference

VII Any Government Gazette of any country colony or dependency under the dominion of the British Crown, may be proved by the bare productions thereof before any of the Courts or persons aforesaid

Proof of Government Gazette

VIII All proclamations, acts of state whether Legislative or Executive nominations, appointments, and other official communications of the Government appearing in any such Gazette, may be proved by the production of such Gazette in which shall be prima facie proof of any fact of a public nature which they were intended to notify

Proof of Proclamations, Acts, state, etc Proclamations, etc when to be prima facie proof of fact

IX Any recital contained in any Act of the Governor General of India in council constituted for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations, hereafter to be passed of any fact of a public nature shall be deemed, before all such Courts and persons to be prima facie evidence of the truth of the fact recited

Recital in Act of a public nature to be prima facie proof

X The Gazette of Newspaper containing any advertisement purporting to be published by virtue of any public statute Act, Regulation, or Ordinance or of any Rule or order of a Court of Justice or of any Board or Office of Revenue, may be received by any such Courts or persons as aforesaid as prima facie evidence that such advertisement was published duly under the authority from which it purports to proceed

Gazette, etc, containing advertisement purporting to be published by authority to be prima facie evidence of such authority

XI All Courts and persons aforesaid may, on matters of public history, literature, science or art refer for the purposes of evidence, to such published books maps or charts as such Courts or persons shall consider to be of authority on the subject to which they relate

Books, maps etc, to be evidence in matters of public history, etc

XII Books printed or published under the authority of the Government of a foreign country, and purporting to contain the Statutes, Code, or other written Law of such country, and also printed and published books of reports of decisions of the Courts of such country and books proved to be commonly admitted in such Courts as evidence of the law of such country, shall be admissible before any such Courts or persons as aforesaid as evidence of the law of such foreign country

What books, etc, shall be evidence of Foreign Law

XIII All maps made under the authority of Government or of any public municipal body and not made for the purpose of any litigated question shall prima facie be deemed to be correct and shall be admitted in evidence without further proof

Government or public maps when to be prima facie proof

XIV The following persons only shall be incompetent to testify

1 Children under seven years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly

2 Persons of unsound mind, who at the time of their examination, appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined or of relating them truly and no person who is known to be of unsound mind shall be liable to be summoned as a witness without the consent, previously obtained of the Court or person before whom his attendance is required

Insane persons not to be summoned without leave of Court

XV Any person who, by reason of immature age or want of religious belief, or who by reason of defect of religious belief ought not, in the opinion of such Court or person to be admitted to give evidence on oath or solemn affirmation shall be admitted to give evidence on a simple affirmation declaring that he will speak the truth the whole truth, and nothing but the truth

Children and persons of defective religious belief to testify on simple affirmation

p. D

Provisions as to witness to apply to affidavits etc.,

XVI The provisions in the last preceding section as to witnesses shall apply to testimony given by affidavit or otherwise in writing as well as to testimony orally delivered

XVII Any such witness wilfully giving false evidence shall be subject to be proceeded against in like manner, and to suffer if convicted, the same punishment as if he had been sworn and had committed wilful and corrupt perjury. The indictment or charge shall be varied so as to meet the case.

XVIII No person shall, by reason of any interest in the result of any suit or of any interest connected therewith, or by reason of relationship to any of the parties thereto, be incompetent to give evidence in such suit.

XIX Any party to a civil suit or other proceeding of a civil nature shall be competent, and may be compelled, to give evidence as a witness therein either on his own behalf or on behalf of any other party to the suit or proceeding and also to produce any document in his possession or power, in the same manner as if he were not a party to the suit or proceeding. Provided that no Court or person as aforesaid other than Her Majesty's Supreme Courts of Judicature, shall compel the attendance of any party to such suit or proceeding, for the purpose of giving evidence therein except under and subject to the rules prescribed in that behalf in Act XIX of 1853.

Proviso
XX A husband or wife shall in every civil proceeding be competent to give evidence for or against each other. Provided that any communication made by husband or wife to the other during their marriage shall be deemed a privileged communication and shall not be disclosed without the consent of the person making the same, unless such communication shall relate to a matter in dispute in a suit pending between such husband and wife.

XIV A witness whether a party or not shall not be bound to produce any document relating to affairs of state, the production of which would be contrary to good policy, nor any document held by him for any other person who would not be bound to produce it if in his own possession.

XXI A witness being a party to the suit shall not be bound to produce any document in his possession or power which is not relevant or material to the case of the party requiring its production, nor any confidential writing or correspondence which may have passed between him and any legal professional adviser. If any party, however offer himself as a witness, he shall be bound to produce any such writing or correspondence in his custody, possession, or power if relevant or material to the case of the party requiring its production.

XXIII Every witness summoned to produce a document shall if the same be in his custody, possession or power be bound to bring it or cause it to be brought into Court although there be a valid objection to the right of the party calling for it to compel its production, or to the reading or putting it in evidence, or to the disclosure of the contents thereof. The validity of any such objection made by the person producing the document shall be determined by the Court, and for the better determination thereof it shall be lawful for the Court to receive any admissible evidence which the person producing the document may give respecting it.

and it shall also be lawful for the Court except in the case of any document relating to the affairs of state, to inspect the document, and if necessary to call to its assistance any person whom it may appoint to interpret the same. Such person, however shall be previously sworn truly to interpret the same to the Court alone and not to disclose the contents thereof except to the Court unless the Court shall order the document to be given in evidence.

XXIV A Barrister, Attorney, or Vakeel shall not, without the consent of his client, disclose any communication made by the client to him in the course of his professional employment nor any advice given by him professionally to his client nor the contents of any document of his client, the knowledge of which he shall have acquired in the course of his professional employment. The privilege, however, is that of the client and if any party to a suit shall give evidence therein at his own instance, he shall be deemed thereby to have waived his privilege and to have consented to the disclosure by such Barrister, Attorney, or Vakeel of any matter aforesaid which may be relevant, and which the Barrister, Attorney, or Vakeel would have been bound to disclose but for the privilege of his client and the Barrister, Attorney or Vakeel shall be bound upon examination to disclose any such matter.

XXV Any person present in Court whether a party or not, may be called upon and compelled by the Court to give evidence and produce any document then and there in his actual possession, or in his power in the same manner and subject to the same rules as if he had been summoned to attend and give evidence, or to produce such document and may be punished in like manner for any refusal to obey the order of the Court.

XXVI Any person whether a party to the suit or not, may be summoned to produce a document without being summoned to give evidence and any person summoned merely to produce a document, shall be deemed to have complied with the summons, if he cause such document to be produced instead of attending personally to produce the same.

XXVII The rules of evidence in Her Majesty's supreme Courts as to matters of Ecclesiastical or Admiralty civil jurisdiction, shall be the same as they are on the Plea side of the Courts.

XXVIII Except in cases of treason, the direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit shall be sufficient for proof of any fact in any such Court or before any such person. But this provision shall not affect any rule of practice of any Court that requires corroborative evidence in support of the testimony of an accomplice or of a single witness in the case of perjury.

XXIX Where dying declarations are evidence they shall be received if it be proved that the decedent was at the time of making the declaration and then thought himself to be, in danger of approaching death though he entertained at the time of making it hope of recovery.

XXX The party at whose instance a witness is examined may with the permission of such Court or person who examine such witness to test his veracity in the same manner as if he had not been called at his instance, and may be allowed to show that the witness has varied from a previous statement made by him.

App D

XXXI In order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, or before any authority lawfully competent to investigate the fact, shall be admissible, and for that purpose a copy of any deposition or statement taken before any Court, Judge, Justice of the Peace, Magistrate or person lawfully exercising the powers of a Magistrate, or before a Commissioner or Superintendent for the suppression of Thuggee or Dacoity, in the discharge of his duty, shall if certified by such Court, Judge, or other officer above mentioned, under his hand or the official seal of the Court, or under the hand or official Seal of such Judge to be a true copy of such deposition or statement without further proof, be received as prima facie evidence that such deposition or statement was made and that it was made at the time and place, and under the circumstances if any which shall be stated in the certificate or on the face of the deposition or statement.

XXXII A witness shall not be excused from answering any question relevant to the matter at issue in any suit or in any Civil or Criminal proceeding, upon the ground that the answer to such question will criminate, or may tend, directly or indirectly, to criminate, such witness or that it will expose, or tend directly or indirectly to expose such witness to a penalty or forfeiture of any kind. Provided that no such answer which a witness shall be compelled to give, shall except for the purpose of punishing such person for wilfully giving false evidence upon such examination, subject him to any arrest or prosecution or be used as evidence against such witness in any Criminal proceeding.

XXXIII A witness in any cause may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any felony or misdemeanour, and upon being so questioned, if he either denies the fact or refuses to answer, it shall be lawful for the opposite party to prove such conviction.

XXXIV A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statement made by him in writing or reduced into writing relative to the subject matter of the cause, without such being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing his attention must before such contradictory proof can be given be called to the parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him. Provided always, that it shall be competent for the Judge at any time during the trial to require the production of the writing for his inspection and he may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as he shall think fit.

XXXV An impression of a document made by a copying machine shall be taken without further proof to be a correct copy.

XXXVI When an original document is out of the reach of the process of the Court it shall be lawful for the Court on application to it in any civil suit or proceeding, and on notice to the opposite party at a reasonable time before the hearing to make an order for the reception of secondary evidence of its execution and contents.

XXXVII An attested document may be proved as if unattested unless it be a document to the validity of which attestation is requisite.

XXXVIII The admission of a party to unattested instrument of its execution by him self shall be as against him sufficient prima facie proof of such execution of it, though it be an instrument which is required by law to be attested.

XXXIX An entry or statement which would be admissible in evidence after the death of the person who made it, on the ground of its having been made against the interest of the person making it or on the ground of its having been made in the ordinary course of business shall be admissible though the person who made it be not dead if he is incapable of giving evidence by reason of his subsequent loss of understanding or is at the time of the trial or hearing bona fide and permanently beyond the reach of the process of the Court, and cannot after diligent search be found

XL Any entry in any books proved to have been regularly kept in the course of business or in any public office, so far as such entry merely refers to and tends to identify by name description number or otherwise any bank notes or other securities for the payment of money or other property and the giver in or receiver of them, shall, in any case where such identification is necessary to be proved be admissible in evidence for that limited purpose if it shall appear to have been made at or about the time of the transaction to which it relates, though the person who made it or be on whose information it was made, is alive and capable of being produced as a witness

XLI Any receipt in writing acknowledging the receipt of any money, valuable securities or goods shall, on proof of the execution thereof, be admissible in evidence before such Court or person aforesaid, not only against the party giving it but also against any person in whose favour such receipt would operate as a discharge or to whom it would render the person giving it, liable for the money, security, or goods acknowledged to have been received

XLII Whenever a receipt would be admissible under the preceding section, if given by a principal or receipt given by an agent or servant of such principal shall in like manner be evidence upon proof of the authority to give such receipt

XLIII Books proved to have been regularly kept in the course of business or in any public office shall be admissible as corroborative evidence in a public office and therein

XLIV The following documents may be admitted as corroborative evidence — Certificates of shares and of registration thereof of bills of lading invoices account sales receipts usually given on the payment deposit or delivery of money goods securities or other things provided they be proved to have been given in the ordinary course of business

XLV A witness shall be allowed before any such Court or person aforesaid to refresh his memory by any writing made by himself or by any other person at the time when the fact occurred or immediately afterward or at any time when the fact was fresh in his memory, and he shall be allowed to refer to the writing in the writing. In such case the writing shall be produced and may be given by the adverse party, who may if he choose, cross-examine the witness upon it

XLVI Whenever a witness may refresh his memory by reference to any document he may with the permission of the Court refer to a copy of such document provided the Court or person under the circumstances, be satisfied that there is sufficient reason for the non production of the original

Court may permit a copy of document to be used to refresh memory

App D

XXXI In order to corroborate the testimony of a witness in any form or manner, a statement made by such witness relating to the facts in or about the transaction in which he is called upon to give evidence before any authority lawfully competent to inquire into the facts shall be admissible and for that purpose a copy of any deposition or statement taken before any Court Judge, Justice of the Peace, Magistrate or person lawfully exercising the powers of a Magistrate or before a Commissioner or Superintendent for the suppression of bandits or District, or the discharge of his duty shall be admissible by such Court Judge or other authority in trial, and the holder of the original of the Court or under the hand or official seal of such Judge, Justice of the Peace, Magistrate or other authority, without further proof, shall be deemed to be a true copy of such deposition or statement, without further proof, and that it was made at the time and place and under the circumstances if any which shall be stated in the certificate or on the face of the deposition or statement.

XXXII A witness shall not be excused from answering any question relevant to the matter at issue in any suit or in any civil or criminal proceeding upon the ground that the answer to such question will criminate or may tend directly or indirectly to criminate such witness or that it will expose or tend directly or indirectly to expose such witness to a penalty or forfeiture of any kind. Provided that no such witness which such witness shall be compelled to give, shall except for the purpose of punishing such person for wilfully giving false evidence upon such examination subject him to any arrest or prosecution or be used as evidence against such witness in any criminal proceeding.

XXXIII A witness in any case may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any felony or misdemeanour and upon him, so questioned if he either denies the fact or refuses to answer it shall be lawful for the opposite party to prove such conviction.

XXXIV A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing relative to the subject matter of the cause, without such being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing his attention must first be called to the writing, and if he does not admit that such contradictory proof can be given, he shall be called to the production of the writing which he is to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him. Provided always that it shall be competent for the Judge at any time during the trial to require the production of the writing for his inspection and he may thereupon make such use of it for the purpose of the trial as he shall think fit.

XXXV An impression of a document made by a copying machine shall be taken without proof to be a correct copy.

XXXVI When an original document is out of the reach of the Court it shall be lawful for the Court on application to it, in any civil suit or proceeding, and to the opposite party at a reasonable time before the trial, to make an order for the reception of evidence of its execution and contents.

XXXVII An attested document may be proved if unattested unless it be a document to the validity of which attestation is required.

XXXVIII The admission of a party to an unattested instrument executed by him self shall be as against him a prima facie proof of such execution although it be an instrument which is required to be attested.

LVI Whenever, by any Statute or Act Regulation or Ordinance now in force, or any Statute or Act to be hereafter in force, my certificate, certified copy or other document, shall be receivable in evidence of any particular in any Court of Justice the same if it is substantially in the form and purports to be executed in the manner directed by the Statute, Act Regulation or Ordinance which makes it evidence, shall be prima facie evidence, where it is rendered admissible without proof of any stamp signature character or authority, which it is directed to have, or from which it is directed to proceed

LVII The improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised, that independently of the evidence objected to and admitted there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision

LVIII Nothing in this Act contained shall be construed as to render inadmissible in any Court any evidence which but for the passing of the Act, would have been admissible in such Court

APPENDIX E

LIABILITY TO DAMAGES FOR REFUSING TO GIVE EVIDENCE

The following section appears like in Act XIX of 1853, applying to Bengal and in Act X of 1853, applying to Madras and Bombay

Act XIX of 1853 Section 26

26 Any person, whether a party to the suit or not, to whom a summons to attend and give evidence or produce a document, shall be personally delivered and who shall without lawful excuse, neglect or refuse to obey such summons or who shall be proved to have absconded, or kept out of the way to avoid being served with such summons and any person who being in Court and upon being required by the Court to give evidence or produce a document in his possession, shall, without lawful excuse refuse to give evidence or state his deposition or to produce a document in his possession shall in addition to any proceedings under this Act, be liable to the party at whose request the summons shall have been issued or at whose instance he shall be required to give evidence or produce the document for all damages which he may sustain in consequence of such neglect or refusal or of such absconding, or keeping out of the way as aforesaid, to be recovered in a Civil action

APPENDIX I

AMENDING ACTS

Act XVIII of 1872

OBSCURE AND RIGOROUS

The primary object of this bill is to continue certain rules which it is believed have been inadvertently repealed by the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. At the same time opportunity is taken to correct some clerical and other accidental errors to which attention has been drawn

App D

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

XLVII In case of pedigree the declarations of ill-timate persons who, though not included by blood or marriage to the family, were intimately acquainted with its members and still, shall be admissible in evidence after the death of the declarant, in the same manner and to the same extent as those of declared members of the family.

XLVIII On an enquiry whether a signature, writing, or comparison of hand any undisputed signature with whose signature, writing, or comparison of hand it may be compared, shall be admissible in evidence.

XLIX A document shall be deemed to be written or printed in the usual form and language of business, if it appears to be so from its contents, and if it is signed, sealed, or otherwise authenticated in the usual manner.

[illegible]

Any power of attorney which has been executed at a place distant from more than one hundred miles from the place wherein in action, suit or proceeding is depending may be provided by the production of it without further proof when it has been executed before and authenticated by a Judge, Consul or Magistrate.

Whenver it is proved that a Letter Book is kept and that according to the usual course of business letters are copied into such book and despatched, and the letter book is produced and despatched, and the letter was despatched according to the usual practice to the best of the knowledge and belief of the witness, having reasonable ground for forming that belief the Court may presume the despatch of that letter according to the usual course of business.

I. Any book proved to have been kept for making the despatch and receipt of letters containing an entry of the despatch of a letter and an acknowledgment of the receipt of such letter shall on proof that such entry was made in the usual course of business be prima facie evidence of the receipt of such letter.

II. So much of Section VI of Act XV of 1872 as relates to the receipt of put of such application as therein is made before the day before the day of the receipt of such application shall be repealed.

III.

LII So much of Section VI of Act X of 1952 as provides that my report of put of such application as therein mentioned shall be made before I sue joined in my such action or twenty one days before the trial or hearing of any other legal proceeding as therein mentioned is hereby repealed.

LIII The provision contained in the 16th Section of Act X of 1952 in extension of section VI of Act X of 1952 which provides that the provisions of the Act shall extend to all suits, proceedings, appeals, applications, motions, and other legal proceedings in the High Court of Madras shall extend to all suits, proceedings, appeals, applications, motions, and other legal proceedings in the High Court of Madras.

LIII The provision contained in the 16th Section of Act VI of 1874 that in any action wherein the plaintiff is a party, the defendant shall be entitled to call in writing before the trial or hearing of any other party, any person who is a party to the action, and to examine him in writing, shall extend to all civil actions and proceedings on all sides of the Court.

LIV So much of the 17th Section of the same Act as relates to the examination of witnesses upon the hearing of any motion, shall extend to all civil actions and proceedings on all sides of the Court.

LIV So much of the 17th section of the same Act as provides that extension of Section VII of Act VI of 1851 upon the hearing of any motion or other proceeding in any of the said Supreme Courts the Court may, if it require and enforce the attendance and oral examination before itself of any witness or of any party to the suit, or may direct the costs of attendance and examination of such witness or party to be put by such of the parties to the suit or in such manner as it may think fit shall extend to all civil actions suits and proceedings on all rules of the said Court

LV The 3rd section of Act No VI of 1851 which Section XXXIII of the former Courts shall be extended directed to be

IV. The 3rd Section of Act No VI of 1851 which applies only to the production of any document or document of any party to the suit or in such manner as the Court shall extend to all civil actions suits and proceedings on all side of the Court.

LVI Whenever, by any Statute or Act Regulation or Ordinance now in force, or any Statute or Act to be hereafter in force, my certificate, certified copy or other document, shall be receivable in evidence of any particular in any Court of Justice the same if it is substantially in the form and purports to be executed in the manner directed by the Statute Act Regulation or Ordinance which makes it evidence shall be prima facie evidence, where it is rendered inadmissible without proof of any stamp, signature, character or authority which it is directed to have, or from which it is directed to proceed

LVII The improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised, that independently of the evidence objected to and admitted there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision, or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision

LVIII Nothing in this Act contained shall be so construed as to render inadmissible in any Court any evidence which but for the passing of the Act, would have been admissible in such Court

APPENDIX E

LIABILITY TO DAMAGES FOR REFUSING TO GIVE EVIDENCE

The following section appears alike in Act XX of 1851 applying to Bengal and in Act X of 1851 applying to Madras and Bombay

Act XIX of 1853, Section 26

26 Any person, whether a party to the suit or not, to whom a summons to attend and give evidence or produce a document shall be personally delivered and who shall without lawful excuse neglect or refuse to obey such summons, or who shall be proved to have absconded, or kept out of the way to avoid being served with such summons and any person who being in Court and upon being required by the Court to give evidence, or produce a document in his possession, shall, without lawful excuse, refuse to give evidence or state his deposition, or to produce a document in his possession shall, in addition to any proceedings under this Act beheld to the party at whose request the summons shall have been issued or at whose instance he shall be required to give evidence or produce the document for all damages which he may sustain in consequence of such neglect or refusal or of such absconding or keeping out of the way as aforesaid, to be recovered in a Civil action

APPENDIX F

AMENDING ACTS

Act XVIII of 1872

OBJECTS AND REASONS

The primary object of this Bill is to continue certain rules which it is believed have been inadvertently repealed by the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 At the same time opportunity is taken to correct some clerical and other accidental errors to which attention has been drawn

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

Section 32 clause (1) renders admissible certain statements as to the existence of relationship. As there are many relations other than those mentioned in the Act the Bill makes the clause precise by adding the words 'in blood marriage or adoption'.

In sections 41 and 45, some words which should have been repeated have been incidentally omitted. The Bill supplies these omissions. The same thing is done in sections 126 and 128 and slight alterations are made in s. 92 to clear up some ambiguity.

Section 27 Cl. (1) declares that the Court shall take judicial notice of the rules of the road. It must have been intended to include the rules of navigation. The Bill therefore adds the words 'on land or at sea'.

Section 66 contains rules as to notice to produce documents. It only mentions notice to the party in whose possession or power a document is. To prevent doubt which might arise in the omission the Bill inserts the words 'or to his attorney or pleader'.

Section 91 exception (2) provides that Wills under the Indian Succession Act may be proved by the probate. But other Wills are admitted to probate and the same mode of proof is made applicable to all such, as doubtless was intended.

Of sections 107 and 108 the latter was clearly intended to be a qualification of the former. The language is altered to produce this effect.

Section 126 relates to professional communications and provides that when made 'in furtherance of any criminal purpose' they shall not be protected from disclosure. As every fraud though illegal is not criminal the Bill amends the provision by substituting the former word for the latter, thus excluding the present rule of law and establishing the same principle for the first and second provisions of this section.

Section 135 para. (2) provides that the credit of a witness may be impeached by proof that he has had the offer of a bribe. The Bill for obvious reason for 'bribe' substitutes 'accepted'. In India, still more than in England, the mere offer of a bribe if unaccepted, should not prejudice the character of the person to whom it is made.

Act XX of 1852 section 12 provides that Her Majesty's Courts and Justices and all officers, Commissioners, Arbitrators, etc. authorised to receive evidence with respect to proceedings in such Courts may administer oath or take oath. The Evidence Act repeals this section and puts nothing in its place. Nor is the matter sufficiently provided for by the Oaths Act (VI of 1872) or any other enactment. The charter of the High Supreme Courts empower these Courts to administer oaths. But nothing is said as to commissioners to examine witnesses. The Bill accordingly gives Act XX of 1852 section 12

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE

12th August 1872.

The Honble Mr. Hobhouse said, presented the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Indian Evidence Act 1872. He said that in considering the Bill the committee had proceeded on the principle that under the circumstances it was no part of their duty to alter any part of the Act on the score of principle but only to effect such alterations as they believed the Legislature would have made if his attention had been called to them. The principal reason for passing the present Bill into law before the 1st September is this:—

Act I of 1872 repealed in effect a prior Act XX of 1852 in one of the sections of that Act it is as follows:—
 'All Her Majesty's Courts within the British territory and all the Justices of the Peace and every Commissioner, Arbitrator or other person lawfully authorised by law or by consent of Court to administer oaths or take oaths in any of such Courts shall be empowered to administer oaths to all persons who are lawfully called before the Court to give evidence.'

Now, that was a positive enactment in the clearest possible terms purporting to confer upon certain tribunals and officers power to administer oath. Prima facie if that power were removed from the Statute Book and nothing put in its place it would cease to exist. The question then was, whether the power could be derived from any other quarter. For the purpose of determining this question it had been necessary to read five Acts of Parliament and ten charters, and to read some of these documents very carefully, since they were fraught on the most perplexing of all principles the principle of declaring void all previous inconsistent provisions. So that you had to read through the whole document to see what was and what was not inconsistent. The result was that the power of administering an oath would remain with the High Courts but would not remain with the Commissioners and Arbitrators then mentioned. It was therefore important to leave upon the Statute Book as clear and extensive an authority as that which was taken out of it and the simplest way of doing that in the present emergency was by continuing the existence of that section. When the time came for dealing with the matter finally the proper place for it would be found in an Act relating to the subject of oaths and affirmations, rather than in one relating to the general subject of evidence.

"Previously to this year the incapacity to administer an oath would have vitiated many legal proceedings. But in the present year an Act (No VI of 1872) was passed, which had two objects—one was to respect and bind the conscience of witnesses, and the other to prevent the entire vitiation of legal proceedings by omissions and irregularities in the administration of oaths. The first object had nothing to do with the present question. An oath was in oath whatever might be the form of it, and the person who administered it must be duly qualified to do so. The second object was important, because it diminished the mischief which might arise from the incapacity of the Judge to administer an oath. But it did not prevent administration of an oath by such incapable person from being an irregularity. Nor was it easy to say how a Judge, upon being pressed with such irregularity, would deal with the case. Certainly, many a Commissioner and Arbitrator would say 'in as much as no objection is made by the witness, and as an oath is the regular form of proceeding and as I have by express legislation been made incapable to administer one, I decline to go on with the case.' Besides this the Act in question did not affix the penalties of perjury to the giving of false testimony under such circumstance. On this point Sections 178 and 179 of the Penal Code showed the importance attached to the legal administration of an oath by duly authorized persons. For the foregoing reasons we should be running some appreciable risk of disturbance of judicial proceedings if we did not pass this Bill into law by the first September on which day Act I of 1872 was to come into force, whereas no possible injury would be done by continuing the section in question the only suggestion is, unless its being that it was useless.

With regard to the other amendments, they would not be remarked upon in detail. They would all speak for themselves, and were intended to cover obvious defects and slips either of writing, or of printing, or of drafting. We had now received several criticisms on Act I of 1872 and there was little doubt that after it had been studied in actual practice it would like most laws of great magnitude and difficulty, and especially those passed on subjects new to legislation require amendment in several particulars.

20th August, 1872

Act III of 1887

OBJECT AND REASONS

'The object of this Bill is to prevent officers of any department concerned with any branch of the public revenue from being compelled to give when they get any information as to the commission of any offence. In India had not only in such cases that witnesses may not be compelled to disclose but they are even permitted to be asked the names of the friends whom they receive information as to crimes on the revenue (See Practical Criminal Law, III, p. 50.)

there is one case, Reg v Francis, (43 L J M C 97) in which evidence was admitted on a charge of obtaining money on false pretences. In that case Lord Coleridge C J said 'It seems clear upon principle that when the fact that the prisoner has done the thing charged is proved, and the only remaining question is, whether at the time he did it he had guilty knowledge of the quality of his act, or acted under a mistake, evidence of the class received must be admissible.' This case probably goes further than any other case, and the amendment which has been proposed of section 15 seems to provide sufficiently for the class of cases in which the peculiar nature of the offence makes this question the crucial test."

"As regards the admission of evidence of other similar acts to prove guilty knowledge, it is thought that such evidence might be admitted in cases in which an accused person is charged, under section 231 Cr Pro Code, with and tried for three offences of the same kind at one trial. That is to say it is proposed to allow the evidence brought forward to prove one of the three offences to be relevant to prove guilty knowledge or intention in the case of the other offences as the accused is charged with and is being tried for all three offences he has an opportunity of disproving the evidence brought against him. Issues are not raised which are foreign to the charge."

Briefly stated the amendments proposed to be made by the Bill are as follows—

(1) the provision allowing a previous conviction to be proved in all cases will be repealed,

(2) a previous conviction will be relevant under section 43 when it is a fact in issue, or otherwise relevant under the Act,

(3) a previous conviction will be relevant as evidence of bad character when such evidence is relevant,

(4) a previous conviction will be relevant to prove guilty knowledge or intention,

(5) the fact that an act formed part of a series of similar occurrences, in each of which the person doing the act was concerned, will be relevant to prove guilty knowledge or intention."

11th July the 1890

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE

"We, the undersigned Members of the Select Committee to which the Bill was referred, have considered the Bill, and have now the honour to submit this our report with the Bill as revised by us annexed hereto.

We generally approve the Bill as introduced, but we consider that the object can be attained by adding to section 14 an Explanation suggested by the High Court.

We consider it desirable to indicate more particularly the classes of persons exercising magisterial functions who are not to be held to be magistrates for the purpose of section 26.

We have added a clause to remove a difficulty which has been experienced in the construction of the words 'for the same offence' in section 30 of the same Act.

6th February, 1891

Act V of 1899

OBJECTS AND REASONS

"It has been held by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Queen Empress v Talir Mamhomed Shet, which was decided on the 16th July, 1896 that the opinion of an expert as to the identity of finger impression is not admissible under s 45 of the Indian Evidence Act 1872. The system of identification by means of such impressions is gaining ground and has been introduced with considerable success, especially in the Lower Provinces of Bengal. It seems desirable that expert evidence in connection with it should be admitted and with that object it is proposed expressly to amend the law on the subject."

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

The law on the subject is further stated in Bills Laws of 1872 as follows:—It is a rule of evidence applicable to criminal cases and the same rule has always been held to apply to penal informations at the suit of the Crown. It is a rule that a witness is not permitted to disclose privileged communication brought to his knowledge, but may be justly called a public privilege and is observed as a principle of public policy and from regard to public interests (1 Phil Ec 272). Hence those questions which tend to the discovery of the channels by which the disclosure was made to the officers of justice are not permitted to be asked (see v Hardy 21 How St Tr 703—per Jure (1). If the name of the informer were to be disclosed no man would make a discovery and public justice would be defeated (1d p 814—per Butler J). In the case of Attorney General v Bryant it was held that a witness for the Crown could not be asked—Did you give the information? (15 M & W 169). It cannot be ascertained from the records why the English law was not incorporated in the Indian Evidence Act. The omission has caused much inconvenience.

11th August, 1886

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE

We the undersigned members of the Select Committee to which the Bill to amend the Indian Evidence Act 1872 was referred have considered the Bill and have the honour to submit this our Report.

We have so altered the section which it was proposed to substitute for section 125 as to limit its operation to the purpose stated in the preamble and following the plan of the Act we have made the definition of Revenue Officer an Explanation to the section instead of a subsection thereof.

4th January 1887

Act III of 1891

OBJECTS AND REASONS

The principal object of this Bill is to amend section 51 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 so as to render the previous conviction of an accused person irrelevant when it is sought to prove the conviction with the object merely of showing that the accused is a man of bad character and is therefore more likely to have committed the offence with which he is charged. The fact that a person has been previously convicted of an offence has of itself little probative force to establish the fact that he has committed another offence, and it is not expedient to admit evidence which can only prejudice the accused. It is proposed to repeal so much of section 51 as provides that in criminal proceedings the fact that the accused person has been previously convicted of any offence is relevant. The result of this amendment of the law will be that the rule as to the relevancy of a previous conviction will be contained in section 4 of the Act. The existence of the judgment convicting the accused will be relevant only if the fact of the conviction is a fact in issue or is relevant under some provision of the Act.

It seems necessary also to amend the Act so as to show, first that in criminal cases where evidence of character is relevant a previous conviction is relevant to prove a relevant state of mind, for instance guilty intention or knowledge. It is proposed to effect the first of these amendments by adding an Explanation to section 51. The second it is proposed to effect by amending the Explanation to section 51 so as to allow a previous conviction to be proved in order to show a guilty knowledge or intention.

In English law for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge evidence of other acts of a nature similar to that charged may be given in cases of uttering false coin or disposing of forged bank notes (1 Russ (1), 233). On the whole evidence of this nature has been confined to cases of coinage and forgery, but there is one case, Reg v Francis, (43 L J M C 97) in which evidence was admitted on a charge of obtaining money on false pretences. In that case Lord Coleridge C J said 'It seems clear upon principle that when the fact that the prisoner has done the thing charged is proved and the only remaining question is, whether at the time he did it he had guilty knowledge of the quality of his act, or acted under a mistake, evidence of the class received must be admissible.' This case probably goes further than any other case, and the amendment which has been proposed of section 15 seems to provide sufficiently for the class of cases in which the peculiar nature of the offence makes this question the crucial test."

"As regards the admission of evidence of other similar acts to prove guilty knowledge, it is thought that such evidence might be admitted in cases in which an accused person is charged, under section 234 Cr Pro Code, with and tried for three offences of the same kind at one trial. That is to say, it is proposed to allow the evidence brought forward to prove one of the three offences to be relevant to prove guilty knowledge or intention in the case of the other offences, as the accused is charged with and is being tried for all three offences he has an opportunity of disproving the evidence brought against him. Issues are not raised which are foreign to the charge."

"Briefly stated the amendments proposed to be made by the Bill are as follows—

(1) the provision allowing a previous conviction to be proved in all cases will be repealed,

(2) a previous conviction will be relevant under section 43 when it is a fact in issue, or otherwise relevant under the Act,

(3) a previous conviction will be relevant as evidence of bad character when such evidence is relevant,

(4) a previous conviction will be relevant to prove guilty knowledge or intention,

(5) the fact that an act formed part of a series of similar occurrences, in each of which the person doing the act was concerned, will be relevant to prove guilty knowledge or intention."

4th July 1890

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE

"We, the undersigned Members of the Select Committee to which the Bill was referred, have considered the Bill, and have now the honour to submit this our report with the Bill as revised by us annexed hereto.

We generally approve the Bill as introduced, but we consider that the object can be attained by adding to section 14 an Explanation suggested by the High Court.

We consider it desirable to indicate more particularly the classes of persons exercising magisterial functions who are not to be held to be magistrates for the purpose of section 26.

We have added a clause to remove a difficulty which has been experienced in the construction of the words 'for the same offence' in section 30 of the same Act."

6th February, 1891

Act V of 1899

OBJECTS AND REASONS

"It has been held by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Queen Empress v Fakir Mahomed Shet, which was decided on the 16th July, 1896 that the opinion of an expert as to the identity of finger impression is not admissible under s 45 of the Indian Evidence Act 1872. The system of identification by means of such impressions is gaining ground, and has been introduced with considerable success, especially in the Lower Provinces of Bengal. It seems desirable that expert evidence in connection with it should be admitted and with that object it is proposed expressly to amend the law on the subject."

App. G.

III INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

The opportunity has been taken to suggest the amendment of two other sections. Section 37 fails to render relevant statements as to the facts of a public nature made in the Acts of certain legislatures. C12 will remove what is now an obvious lacuna. The remaining amendment is of a purely formal character.

5th October, 1898

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE

"We, the undersigned Members of the Select Committee to which the Bill to further amend the Indian Evidence Act 1872 was referred, have considered the Bill and have now the honour to submit this our Report with the Bill as amended by us annexed hereto.

We have added a sub-section making consequential amendment in section 73 of the Act.

1st February 1899

APPENDIX G

THE BANKERS' BOOKS, EVIDENCE ACT
Act XVIII of 1891

Received the assent of the Governor General on the 1st October 1891

An Act further to amend the Law of Evidence with respect to Bankers' Books

Whereas it is expedient to amend the Law of Evidence with respect to Bankers' Books, It is hereby enacted as follows, —

Title extent and commencement

1 (1) This Act may be called the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1891

(2) It extends to be whole of British India

(3) [Repealed by Act X of 1914, Schedule II]

Notes This Act is primarily intended for the convenience of bankers and to facilitate proof of their transactions.—R v Bono 29 I L R 635, Arnott v Hayes 36 Ch D 731, Kissan v Lml (1896) 1 Q B 574 Pollock v Earle, (1898) 1 Ch 1

2 In this Act, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context,—

Definitions

(1) "Company" means a company registered under any of the enactments relating to companies for the time being in force in the United Kingdom or in any of the Colonies or Dependencies thereof or in British India or incorporated by an Act of Parliament or of the Governor General in Council, or by Royal Charter or Letters Patent

(2) "bank" and "banker" mean—

(a) any company carrying on the business of bankers

(b) any partnership or individual to whose books the provisions of this Act shall have been extended as hereinafter provided

(c) any post office savings bank or money order office,

(3) "bankers' books" include ledgers, day books, cash-books, account books, and all other books used in the ordinary business of a bank,

(4) "legal proceeding" means any proceeding or inquiry in which evidence is, or may be given and includes an arbitration

(5) "The Court" means the person or persons before whom legal proceeding is held or taken,

(6) "Judge" means a Judge of a High Court

(7) "trial" means any hearing before the Court at which evidence is taken, and

(8) "certified copy" means a copy of any entry in the books of a bank together with a certificate written at the foot of such copy that it is a true copy of such entry, that such entry is contained in one of the ordinary books of the bank, and was made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that such book is still in the custody of the bank, such certificate being dated and subscribed by the principal accountant or manager of the book with his name and official title

Origin This Act is based on the English Bankers Books Evidence Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict C 11)

Company Copies of entries in the books of a Bank which does not come within the definition of a "Company" as given in sub section (1) though certified in accordance with the form prescribed by that Act are not admissible in evidence under the provisions of this Act Empress v Patel, 1 C W N 433 (F B)

Bank According to s 9 of the English Act, 'bank' and 'banker' mean any person, persons partnership or company carrying on the business of bankers and having duly made a return to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and also any savings bank certified under the Acts relating to Savings Banks, and also any post office Savings Bank. The word 'bank' connotes the business of utilising money received for purposes of profit. The mere fact that a Government Treasury receives money from a District Board and respects orders issued to it for payment does not constitute the Treasury a Bank. Rangaswami v Sankaralingam, 43 M 816=39 M L J 327=58 Ind Cas 893, Folsey v Hill, 2 H L C 28, (43) per Lord Brougham

Banker In Halifax Union v Wheclwright 10 Ex 183=44 L J Ex 121, Brown Cleasby said "First it is said that taking that statute together with several other statutes on the same subject the word banker was not to be restricted to persons regularly engaged in the business of banking but that any person who receives the money of another into his charge and according to the course of business between them, pays it out by having drafts drawn upon him payable to order, ought to be considered a banker within the meaning of that enactment. We cannot accede to that argument." "A banker is one who, in the ordinary course of his business, honours cheques drawn upon him by persons from and for whom he receives money." Hart's Law of Banking

App G

4 Subject to the provisions of this Act, a certified copy of any entry in a banker's book shall, in all legal proceedings, be received as prima facie evidence of the existence of such entry, and shall be admitted as evidence of the matters, transactions, and accounts therein recorded in every case where, and to the same extent as, the original entry itself is now by law admissible, but not further or otherwise.

Principle "Then if they are not removable on the ground of public inconvenience, that is upon the same footing in point of principle as in the case of that which is not removable by the physical nature of the thing itself. The necessity of the case in the one instance, and in the other case the general public inconvenience which would follow from the books being removed, supplies the reason of the rule. Per Alderson B in Mortimer v. McCollan, 6 M & W 38 67.

Scope and object of the section The Act was passed mainly for the relief of bankers to avoid the serious inconvenience occasioned to them by their having to produce books which were in constant use in their business'. Parnell v Wood, (1892) P 137. 'Banks are subject to the performance of duties to the public which might be seriously interfered with if they were compelled to carry the books needed in their business into every Court or tribunal where testimony is to be introduced concerning them. Books belonging to public offices cannot be removed from their legal custody without some strong necessity for their production. While bank books are not public to the same extent yet the business which the corporations are required to transact cannot be done unless the books are usually preserved where they belong'. Per Campbell C in People v Thurst, 41 Mich 328 (Am). This Act makes copies of such entries evidence against any one thus the entries in a defendant's banker's books are evidence against the plaintiff. Harding v Button, 51 L. J. 111. Per Alderson B in Mortimer v McCollan.

successors of the Handysides (1906) evidence to be procu
 Immolt v Star Ac
 (1913) 29 T L R 63 and product
 New York party v bankers obtain a
 Ch D 16

5 No officer of a bank shall in any legal proceeding to which the bank is not a party be compellable to produce any bankers book, the contents of which can be proved under this Act, or to appear as a witness to prove the matters, transactions, and accounts therein recorded unless by order of the Court or a Judge made for a special cause.

Cust in which off
car of bank not com
pellable to produce books

Scope This section corresponds to section 6 of the English Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict 11) By this section a banker is excused from personal attendance in Court See also Emmott v Star News paper Co 62 L J B, 77

6 (1) On the application of any party to a legal proceeding, the Court or a Judge may order that such party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in a banker's book for any of the purposes of such proceeding, or on any order the bank to prepare and produce, within a time to be specified in the order, certified copies of all such entries, accompanied by a further certificate that no other entries are to be found in the books of the bank relevant to the matters in issue in such proceeding and such further certificate shall be dated and subscribed in manner hereinbefore directed in reference to certified copies

(2) An order under this or the preceding section may be made either with or without summoning the bank, and shall be served on the bank three clear days (exclusive of bank holidays) before the same is to be obeyed, unless the Court or Judge shall otherwise direct

(3) The bank may, at any time before the time limited for obedience to any such order as aforesaid, either offer to produce their books at the trial, or give notice of their intention to show cause against such orders and thereupon the same shall not be enforced without further order

Scope This section corresponds to section 7 of the English Act A magistrate before whom criminal proceedings are pending is a Court within the meaning of the Act and can therefore make an order under this section R. Kinghorn, (1903) 2 K B 949 under the English Act any Judge in any division of the United Kingdom has jurisdiction in any other Kissam v Lint, (1896) 1 Q B 574=65 L J Q B 433 C A Such an order can be made ex parte, but the Judge ought to be careful about so doing Arnott v Hayes, 36 Ch D 731 C A, L. Anne v Wilson, (1907) 2 Ir 103, Emmott v Star News paper Co, 62 L J Q B 77, South Staffordshire v Ebb's Smith, (1895) 2 Q B 674, per Lord Esher But as a rule it should be made by a summons or a notice under the summons for direction Arnott v Hayes 36 Ch D 731 Davies v White 53 L J Q B 275 The party whose account is sought to be inspected may oppose the application on any ground on which inspection of ordinary documents could be resisted Yearly Practice, (1921) 458 No evidence is absolutely necessary, but the Judge must be satisfied that the entries in question are admissible in evidence in the action, and for this purpose evidence may be

HIL INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

App G

3 The Local Government may, from time to time, by notification to extend the official Gazette, extend the provisions of this Act to the books of any partnership or individual carrying on the business of bankers with the territories under its administration, and keeping a set of not less than three ordinary account-books, namely, a cash book, a day book, a journal, and a ledger, and may in like manner rescind any such notification.

4 Subject to the provisions of this Act, a certified copy of any entry in a banker's book shall, in all legal proceedings, be received as prima facie evidence of the existence of such entry, and accounts therein recorded in every case where, and to the same extent as, the original entry itself is now by law admissible, but not further or otherwise.

Origin This section is based on Section 3 of the English Bankers Books Evidence Act 1879 which runs as follows "Subject to the provisions of this Act a copy of any entry in a banker's book shall in all legal proceedings be received as prima facie evidence of such entry, and of the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded."

Principle "Then if they are not removable on the ground of public inconvenience that is upon the same footing in point of principle as in the case of that which is not removable by the physical nature of the thing itself. The necessity of the case in the one instance, and in the other case the general public inconvenience which would follow from the books being removed, supplies the reason of the rule." Per Alderson B in Wortner v McCollan, 6 M & W 58 67

Scope and object of the section "The Act was passed mainly for the relief of bankers to avoid the serious inconvenience occasioned to them by their having to produce books which were in constant use in their business." Parnell v Wood, (1892) P 137 "Bankers are subject to the performance of duties to the public which might be seriously interfered with if they were compelled to carry the books needed in their business into every Court or tribunal where testimony is to be introduced concerning them. Books belonging to public offices cannot be removed from their legal custody without some strong necessity for their production. While bank books are not public to the same extent yet the business which the corporations are required to transact cannot be done unless the books are usually preserved where they belong." Per Campbell C J in People v Hunt, 41 Mich 528 (Am) This Act makes copies of such entries evidence against any one thus the entries in a defendant's bankers books are made evidence against the plaintiff. Harding v Williams 14 Ch D 197, see also London & W Bank v Bullock 51 Sol Jo 466 The Act applies to all books kept by the bank even although not in daily use and applies to the successors of a bank by whom the entries were made. Asylum for Idiots v Emmott v Star News paper Co 62 L J Q B 77 R v Bono and another (1913) 29 T L R 635 and to relieve bankers from the necessity of attending and producing their books. Parnell v Wood, (1892) P 137 Emmott v Star Newspaper Co supra, Pollock v Earle (1898) 1 Ch 1 at p 4 It enables a party who formerly had the right to issue a subpoena duces tecum to compel bankers to produce their books and to attend and to be examined on them to obtain an order for leave to inspect and take copies of them. R Marshallfield, 32 Ch D 499

5 No officer of a bank shall in any legal proceeding to which the bank is not a party be compellable to produce any bankers book, the contents of which can be proved under this Act, or to appear as a witness to prove the matters, transactions, and accounts therein recorded unless by order of the Court or a Judge made for a special cause

Cause in which officer of bank not compellable to produce books

Scope This section corresponds to section 6 of the English Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict 11) By this section a banker is exempted from personal attendance in Court See also Emmott v Star News paper Co 62 L J B, 77

6 (1) On the application of any party to a legal proceeding, the Court or a Judge may order that such party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in a banker's book for any of the purposes of such proceeding, or may order the bank to prepare and produce, within a time to be specified in the order, certified copies of all such entries, accompanied by a further certificate that no other entries are to be found in the books of the bank relevant to the matters in issue in such proceeding and such further certificate shall be dated and subscribed in manner hereinbefore directed in reference to certified copies

(2) An order under this or the preceding section may be made either with or without summoning the bank, and shall be served on the bank three clear days (exclusive of bank holidays) before the same is to be obeyed, unless the Court or Judge shall otherwise direct

(3) The bank may, at any time before the time limited for obedience to any such order as aforesaid, either offer to produce their books at the trial, or give notice of their intention to show cause against such orders and thereupon the same shall not be enforced without further order

Scope This section corresponds to section 7 of the English Act A magistrate before whom criminal proceedings are pending is a Court within the meaning of the Act and can therefore make an order under this section R Kinghorn (1903) 2 K B 949 under the English Act any Judge in any division of the United Kingdom has jurisdiction in any other Aissam v Lunt, (1896) 1 Q B 574 = 65 L J Q B 433 C A Such an order can be made ex parte but the Judge ought to be careful about so doing Innott v Hayes, 36 Ch D 731 C A L'Amie v Wilson, (1907) 2 Ir 103 Emmott v Star News paper Co, 62 L J Q B 77, South Staffordshire v Ebbs Smith, (1895) 2 Q B 674, per Lord Esher But as a rule it should be made by a summons or a notice under the summons for direction Arnott v Hayes 36 Ch D 731, Davies v White, 53 L J Q B 275 The party whose account is sought to be inspected may oppose the application on any ground on which inspection of ordinary documents could be resisted Yearly Practice, (1921) 453 No evidence is absolutely necessary but the Judge must be satisfied that the entries in question are admissible in evidence in the action, and for this purpose evidence may be required Arnott v Hayes, 36 Ch D, 731, Pouell 375. This section does not give any new power of discovery (Arnott v Hayes 36 Ch D 737 R v Bono and Another, 29 T L R 635), or alter the principles of law or the practice with regard to discovery (Pollock v Earle, 1895 1 Ch 4) or take away any previously existing ground of privilege (South Staffordshire Tramways Co v Ebbs Smith (1895) 2 Q B 669 C A, Parnell v Wood, (1892) P 139). An order under this section should be made on sufficient ground only. Perry v Phosphor Diester Co, (1894) 71 L T 1 854. Where a defendant applied for inspection to assist him to justify a libel imputing pecuniary embarrassment, inspection was refused. Emmet v Star Newspaper Co 62 L J Q B 77. Similarly in Pollock v Earle (1898) 1 Ch 1, the C A refused to make an order in the case of third persons who were neither natural nor constructive parties to the case, et seq as to the bank balance of a company, in an action against one of its directors for inducing a purchase of its shares by alleged misrepresentation as to such balance. Philp Et 332. In the above case Landley M R said "The Court should take care that this section is not made a means of oppression. The order should only be made where the entries of which inspection is sought will be admissible in evidence at the trial." Howard v Beall 23 Q B D at p 2.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

It seems that the Court has jurisdiction to order inspection of the accounts of third parties. Howard v Beall 23 Q B D 1. South Staffordshire v Ebbs Smith (1895) 2 Q B 669. M Gorman v Kierans 35 Ir L T R 84. Iga Baul v Asahi Rum P L R 1900 p 237. But this power should not be exercised ordinarily. Pollock v Earle, (1898) 1 Ch 1. But when order for inspecting the accounts of third parties is sought, a notice should be given to him. South Staffordshire v Ebbs Smith (1895) 2 Q B 669.

This section applies to all books kept by the bank, even when they are not in daily use and applies to the successors of the bank by whom the entries were made. Asylum for Idiots v Handysides (1906) 22 T L R 573. But it is doubtful whether the Loan Register in a Banker's Books come within the meaning of the Bankers Books Evidence Act. Chandi Charan v Dostab 31 C 284 = 8 C W N 125. The fact that the plaintiff has scheduled his pass book in his affidavit of documents does not necessarily deprive the defendant from getting an order to inspect the banker's book and in a fit case an order will be made. Perry v Phosphor Co (1894) 71 L T 854. Early Practice (1921) 439. The qualifications of the contractual duty of secrecy implied in the relation of banker and customer are: (n) Where disclosure is under compulsion by law. (b) where there is a duty to the public to disclose, (c) where the interest of the bank required disclosure, and (d) where the disclosure is made by the express or implied consent of the customer. Tourner v National Provincial Bank's (1921) 1 K B 461 = 93 J T K B 449. Where a party desires an order under section 6 of the Bankers Books Evidence Act 1891, on his own behalf the Court ought to grant it ex parte but where he applies against the other party the Court ought not to make the order without notice to the other party. Treumal v Lalhmichand, 5 Bom L R 865.

7 (1) The costs of any application to the Court or a Judge, under or for the purposes of this Act, and the costs of anything done or under or for the purposes of this Act, shall be in the discretion of the Court or Judge, who may further order such costs or any part thereof to be paid to any party by the bank if they have been incurred in consequence of any fault or improper delay on the part of the bank.

(2) Any order made under this section for the payment of costs to or by a bank may be enforced as if the bank were a party to the proceeding.

(3) Any order under this section awarding costs may, on application to any Court of Civil Judicature designated in the order, be executed by such Court as if the order were a decree for money passed by itself App

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall be construed to derogate from any power which the Court or Judge making the order may possess for the enforcement of its or his directions with respect to the payment of costs

APPENDIX H

THE INDIAN OATHS ACT

ACT X OF 1873

Received the assent of the Governor General on the 8th April, 1873

An Act to consolidate the law relating to Judicial oaths, and for other purposes

Whereas it is expedient to consolidate the law relating to judicial oaths, affirmations and declarations and to repeal the law relating to official oaths, affirmations and declarations, It is hereby enacted as follows —

I PRELIMINARY

Short title                      1 This Act may be called "The Indian Oaths Act, 1873"

It extends to the whole of British India, and so far as regards subjects of Her Majesty, to the territories of Native Princes and States in alliance with Her Majesty,

Local extent

[Commencement]—Repealed by the Repealing Act, 1873 (XII of 1871)

History "The employment of oaths" says Prof Wigmore "takes our history back to the origins of Germanic law and custom, where, as in all primitive civilizations, the appeal to the supernatural plays an important part in the administration of justice. But the use of oaths for witnesses appears as only a single and subordinate phase of the general resort to oaths. The early Germanic modes of trials consisted largely in a reference, in one form or another, to the Judicium Dei. By oaths formally taken one might even establish his claim or his plea beyond attack. It was not a matter of weighing the credibility of a sworn statement, the thought was rather that such an appeal could not be falsely made with impunity. To such an invocation a judicial and determinative effect was attributed by the religious notions of the time. The progress from this notions of the oath at large (which left its traces as late as the 1800's in some of the common modes of procedure) to the second stage of a test or security for credibility was slow and gradual. In the 1700's came the beginning of a third stage of development, in which legislature sanctioned what the community had

Magistrate has right to administer oath to a witness Emperon v Lal 12 Cr L J 577=12 Ind Cas 841=4 Bur L T 130 By s 4 of the Oaths Act 1873, all persons having by law authority to receive evidence are empowered to administer oaths and affirmations in discharge of the duties, of the powers imposed or conferred on them by law King
v Palisi, 2 L B R 272 A Sub magistrate acting under cb XIV of Procedure Code is a Court acting in the discharge of a duty on him by law and is therefore authorized to administer oath under Teron v Emperon, 29 M 89=3 Cr L J 370 Witnesses examined by a Commissioner appointed under Act XXXVII of 1850 to hold in into the behaviour of a certain Judicial officer, are bound to state and render themselves liable to be punished under s 193 I P C if they falsely Gobind Ram v Empress, 18 P R 1898 Cr The proce-ding arbitrator is not governed by the Oaths Act Bhaqirath v Ram 203=A W N 1932, 34 A Magistrate is not competent to administer oath in the course of a non judicial inquiry Allahucarajo v Crown, 8=35 Ind Cas 672

SECTION 5. BY WHOM OATHS OR AFFIRMATIONS MUST BE MADE

5 Oaths or affirmations shall be made by— by the following persons — witnesses, that is to say, all persons who may lawfully be examined, or give, or be required to give, evidence by or before any Court acting by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence,

(b) interpreters of questions put to,
 and evidence given by, witnesses,

(c) jurors

who are contained shall render it lawful to ad-
 - proceeding, an oath or affirmation to necessary to administer to the official inter-, after he has entered on the execution of duty, an oath or affirmation that he will those duties

"An oath is a religious sanction that mankind have agreed that when the witness is of a religion it is of all religion is the belief of a God' Per Lee
 , 1 Atk. 455 In the same case Wills L C J in a God, and that He will regard and punish us necessary to qualify a man to take an oath Hadwick necessary to an oath is an appeal to the Supreme power of truth and the avenger of falsehood. In Martin B said "The doctrine laid down (in essence of an oath was an appeal to the of the person taking the oath believed, and of truth and an avenger of falsehood" present relates to present life or to future exist-McLaugh, L R 14 Q B D 697, Brett M R person taking the oath should believe that future state. If there be any belief in a power that a Supreme Being would punish a man it is enough' In Shair v. Moore, 1 Jones

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

App H

come fully to believe in them, that the material requirement of an oath marked injustice, and that theological belief should not obstruct the admission of competent witnesses. In this struggle the tendency has been either to make the application of the oath optional with the witness, or to abandon its essential feature by rendering theological belief unnecessary." Higmore § 1815

Theory of oath The theory of the oath, in modern common law, may be termed a subjective one, in contrast to the earlier one, which may be termed objective. The oath is not summoning of Divine vengeance upon false swearing whereby when the spectators see the witness standing unharmed they know that the Divine Judgment has pronounced him to be a truth teller. But it is a method of reminding the witness strongly of the Divine punishment somewhere in store for false swearing, and thus of putting him in a frame of mind calculated to speak the truth as he saw it. Higmore § 1816

Applicability The provisions of the Indian Oaths Act are not intended to be utilized in such a manner as would abrogate the provisions of the Evidence Act. Statement on special oath is evidence but if what is deposed to is not admissible in evidence under the Evidence Act, the fact of a special oath will not make it admissible. Shelk Jamu v Muhammad, 90 Ind Cas 378 = A I R 1926 Nag 191

2 [Repeal of Enactments] Repealed by Act XII of 1873

3 Nothing herein contained applies to proceedings before Courts Martial or to oaths, affirmations or declarations prescribed "by or under any Instructions under the Royal Sign Manual of His Majesty or" by any law which, under the provisions of the India Councils Act, 1861, the Governor General in Council has no power to repeal

II AUTHORITY TO ADMINISTER OATHS AND AFFIRMATIONS

4 The following Courts and persons are authorized to administer, by themselves, or by an officer empowered by them, in this behalf, oaths and affirmations in discharge of the duties or in exercise of the powers imposed or conferred upon them respectively by law —

- (a) all Courts and persons having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence,
- (b) the commanding officer of any military station occupied by troops in the service of Her Majesty

Provided

- (1) that the oath or affirmation be administered within the limits of the station, and
- (2) that the oath or affirmation be such as a Justice of the Peace is competent to administer in British India

Scope A Magistrate holding an enquiry as to the fitness of a surety has power to record evidence on oath in the exercise of the power and duty conferred upon him. Emperor v Ghulam, 26 A 371 = A W N 1901 52 There is no provision of law which requires a Court examining a witness to record the fact that an oath was administered. Syed Ahmad v King Emperor, 11 A I R 933 = 35 A 575 Under the rules framed under the Sheriat-e-Nabawi

* Inserted by s 2 of Act VI of 1919

Act, a Magistrate has right to administer oath to a witness. Emperor v Lal Meah, 12 Cr L J 577=12 Ind Cas 841=1 Bur L J 130 By s 1 of the Indian Oaths Act 1873 all persons having by law authority to receive evidence are authorised to administer oaths and affirmations in discharge of the duties, or in exercise of the power imposed or conferred on them by law. King Emperor v Palani 2 I B R 272 A Submagistrate acting under ch XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code is a Court acting in the discharge of a duty imposed on him by law and is therefore authorized to administer oath under this section. Teron v Emperor, 29 M 89=3 Cr I J 370 Witnesses examined before a Commissioner appointed under Act XXXVII of 1850 to hold an enquiry into the behaviour of a certain Judicial officer, are bound to state the truth and render themselves liable to be punished under s 193 I P C if they testify falsely. Gobind Ram v Empress, 18 P R 1898 Cr The procedure of the arbitrator is not governed by the Oaths Act. Bhaqirath v Ram Ghulam, 4 A 283=1 W N 1882, 34 A Magistrate is not competent to administer oath in the course of a non judicial inquiry. Maharajah v Crown, 17 Cr L J 368=35 Ind Cas 672

III PERSON BY WHOM OATHS OR AFFIRMATIONS MUST BE MADE

Oaths or affirmations to be made by— 5 Oaths or affirmations shall be made by the following persons —

(a) All witnesses, that is to say, all persons who may lawfully be examined, or give, or be required to give, evidence by or before any Court or person having by law or consent of parties authority to examine such persons or to receive evidence,

(b) interpreters of questions put to, and evidence given by, witnesses,

(c) jurors

Nothing herein contained shall render it lawful to administer, in a criminal proceeding, an oath or affirmation to a accused person, or necessary to administer to the official interpreter of any Court, after he has entered on the execution of the duties of his office, an oath or affirmation that he will faithfully discharge those duties

Nature of the Belief "An oath is a religious sanction that mankind have universally established. I agree that when the witness is of a religion it is sufficient for the foundation of all religion is the belief of a God." Per Lee L C J in Omchand v Barker, 1 Atk. 455 In the same case Wills L C J said "Nothing but the belief in a God, and that He will regard and punish us according to our deserts is necessary to qualify a man to take an oath." Hadwich L C added "All that is necessary to an oath is an appeal to the Supreme Being, as thinking him the rewarder of truth and the avenger of falsehood. In Miller v Salomons, 7 Exch 535 Martin B said "The doctrine laid down (in Omchand v Barker) was that the essence of an oath was an appeal to the Supreme Being in whose existence the person taking the oath believed, and whom he also believed to be a rewarder of truth and an avenger of falsehood. It is immaterial whether the punishment relates to present life or to future existence. In Attorney General v Bradlaugh, L R 14 Q. B D 697, Brett MR said "There is no necessity that the person taking the oath should believe that he will be liable to be punished in a future state. If there be any belief in a religion according to which it is supposed that a Supreme Being would punish a man in this world for doing wrong that is enough." In Shaw v Moore 4 Jones

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

H come fully to believe namely that the inexorable requirement of an oath marked injustice, and that theological belief should not obstruct the admission of competent witnesses. In this state the tendency has been either to make the application of the oath optional with the witness, or to abandon its essential feature by rendering theological belief unnecessary." Ignore § 1815

Theory of oath The theory of the oath, in modern common law, may be termed a subjective one in contrast to the earlier one, which may be termed objective. The oath is not summoning of Divine vengeance upon false swearing whereby when the spectator sees the witness standing unharmed they know that the Divine Judgment has pronounced him to be a truth teller. But it is a method of reminding the witness strongly of the Divine punishment somewhere in store for false swearing and thus of putting him in a frame of mind calculated to peak the truth as he saw it. Ignore § 1816

Applicability The provisions of the Indian Oaths Act are not intended to be utilized in such a manner as would abrogate the provisions of the Evidence Act. Statement on special oath is evidence but if what is deposed to is not admissible in evidence under the Evidence Act, the fact of a special oath will not make it admissible. Shah Jamu v Muhammad, 90 Ind Cas 778 = A I R 1926 Nag 191

2 [Repeal of Enactments] Repealed by Act XII of 1873
Nothing herein contained applies to proceedings before Courts Martial or to oaths, affirmations or declarations prescribed "by or under any Instructions under the Royal Sign Manual of His Majesty or" by any law which, under the provisions of the India Councils Act, 1861, the Governor General in Council has no power to repeal

II AUTHORITY TO ADMINISTER OATHS AND AFFIRMATIONS

4 The following Courts and persons are authorized to administer oaths and affirmations, by themselves, or by an officer empowered by them, in this behalf, oaths and affirmations in discharge of the duties or in exercise of the powers imposed or conferred upon them respectively by law —

- (a) all Courts and persons having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence,
- (b) the commanding officer of any military station occupied by troops in the service of Her Majesty

Provided

- (1) that the oath or affirmation be administered within the limits of the station, and
- (2) that the oath or affirmation be such as a Justice of the Peace is competent to administer in British India

Scope A Magistrate holding an enquiry as to the fitness of a surety has power to record evidence on oath in the exercise of the power and duty conferred upon him. Emperor v Ghulam, 26 A 371 = A W N 1901 52. There is no provision of law which requires a Court examining a witness to record the fact that an oath was administered. Syed Ahmad v King Emperor, 11 A L J 933 = 33 A 575. Under the rules framed under the Steam Vessels

* Inserted by s 2 of Act VI of 1919

Act, a Magistrate has right to administer oath to a witness. Emperor v Lal Meah 12 Cr L J 577=12 Ind Cas 841=1 Bur L T 130 By s 4 of the Indian Oaths Act 1873 all persons having by law authority to receive evidence are authorised to administer oaths and affirmations in discharge of the duties, or in exercise of the powers imposed or conferred on them by law. King Emperor v Pakisi, 2 L B R 272 A Sub magistrate acting under ch XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code is a Court acting in the discharge of a duty imposed on him by law and is therefore authorized to administer oath under this section. Teron v Emperor, 29 M 89=3 Cr L J 370 Witnesses examined before a Commissioner appointed under Act XXXVII of 1850 to hold an enquiry into the behaviour of a certain Judicial officer, are bound to state the truth and render themselves liable to be punished under s 193 I P C if they testify falsely. Gobind Ram v Empress, 18 P R 1898 Cr The procedure of the arbitrator is not governed by the Oaths Act. Bhagurath v Ram Ghulam, 4 A 283=1 W N 1882, 31 A Magistrate is not competent to administer oath in the course of a non judicial inquiry. Illahuarayo v Crown, 17 Cr L J 368=35 Ind Cas 672

III PERSON BY WHOM OATHS OR AFFIRMATIONS MUST BE MADE

Oaths or affirmations to be made by— 5 Oaths or affirmations shall be made by the following persons —

(a) All witnesses, that is to say, all persons who may lawfully be examined, or give, or be required to give, evidence by or before any Court or person having by law or consent of parties authority to examine such persons or to receive evidence,

(b) interpreters of questions put to, and evidence given by, witnesses,

(c) jurors

Nothing herein contained shall render it lawful to administer, in a criminal proceeding, an oath or affirmation to an accused person, or necessary to administer to the official interpreter of any Court, after he has entered on the execution of the duties of his office, an oath or affirmation that he will faithfully discharge those duties

Nature of the Belief "An oath is a religious sanction that mankind have universally established. I agree that when the witness is of a religion it is sufficient for the foundation of all religion is the belief of a God." Per Lee L C J in Omichand v Barker, 1 Atk 455 In the same case Wills L C J said "Nothing but the belief in a God, and that He will regard and punish us according to our deserts is necessary to qualify a man to take an oath." Hadwici L C added "All that is necessary to an oath is an appeal to the Supreme Being, as thinking him the rewarder of truth and the avenger of falsehood. In Muller v Salomons, 7 Exch 535 Martin B said "The doctrine laid down (in Omichand v Barker) was that the essence of an oath was an appeal to the Supreme Being in whose existence the person taking the oath believed, and whom he also believed to be a rewarder of truth and an avenger of falsehood." It is immaterial whether the punishment relates to present life or to future existence. In Attorney General v Bradlaugh, L R 14 Q B D 697, Brett M R said "There is no necessity that the person taking the oath should believe that he will be liable to be punished in a future state. If there be any belief in a religion according to which it is supposed that a Supreme Being would punish a man in this world for doing wrong that is enough." In Shaw v Moore, 4 Jones

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

P. H. L. 26, Pearson J said 'There is no ground for making a distinction between the fear of punishment by the Supreme Being in this world and the fear of punishment in the world to come. Both are founded upon the sense of religion. The efficacy of the fear of the punishment in either case depends upon the degree of belief as to the certainty of that punishment so that there can be upon reason no ground for making a distinction. The rule of law which requires a religious sanction is satisfied in either case.' Wignmore § 1817. The purpose of the Oath is not to call the attention of God to the witness but the attention of the witness to God. All that is necessary to an oath is an appeal to the Supreme Being as thinking him the rewarder of truth and the avenger of falsehood. Inda v Jog Mohan, 1924 Oudh 442.

Persons subjected to the oath. This section has 3 affirmations shall be made by the three following witnesses (2) interpreters, and (3) must all testimonial statements and must be made in the presence of the witness and must be made in the presence of the witness and must be made in the presence of the witness.

Persons subjected to the oath. This section lays down that oaths or affirmations shall be made by the three following classes of persons namely (1) witnesses (2) interpreters, and (3) jurors. So oath or affirmation is requisite in all testimonial statements made in Court. An interpreter is a kind of witness and must be sworn. Ignoré & 1824, R v Douglas, 13 Q B D 42, 50, 61
72 A juror should also be sworn. Queen v Ramsdoy, 20 W R Ct 19
Accused person. Originally, an accused person was allowed to swear, but this was abolished by section 342 (4) of the Cr. P. Act, 1908. Now, an accused person is not allowed to swear, but he might produce them if he is allowed to do so.

no witnesses, accused person 'Originally an accused person was allowed to produce finally they were allowed to be sworn' Wigmore § 824. An interpreter is a kind of witness as section 342 (4) of the Cr Pro Code lays down that no oath shall be administered to the accused reference only to the statement made by him in answers to questions put to him by the Court under this section. It has no reference to any other act of the accused, and therefore the accused can make an affidavit on oath in support of an application for transfer of the case under section 526 Ghulam v Emperor 3 Loh 46-23 Cr L J 399 see also *Raj v Hanumantha B 190 Aliod v King Emperor, 20 A 126 Joseph v Nya Ague v Banu v Dalgua 10 Q E v Tribum, 20 A 126 The term 'accused' means a person under trial Amya 3 Bom L R 437 Krishna Doyal v Corporation of Calcutta 31 C W N 506-28 Cr L J 266 Hunda v Emperor 2 C L J 149, see also Emperor v Gowind, 18 Bom L R 407 A magistrate has no power to administer an oath or affirmation to a person whose statements he records under s 164 Cr Pro Code Lalu v Empress 2 P R 1893 Or see also 10 C P L R Cr 16*

Scope of the section
The direction in s 164 Cr Pro Code is merely a direction as to procedure. The law permits to be recorded in one of the manner mentioned in the section without prejudice to the right of the court to require the deposition to be taken in any other manner.

see also 10 C P L R Cr 16

Scope of the section The direction in s 164 Cr Pro Code, that the statement shall be recorded in one of the manners prescribed for recording evidence is merely a direction as to procedure. The statement itself is one which the law permits to be made before the Court by a witness and is therefore evidence within the definition of s 3 of the Evidence Act. The person making it is a witness within s 5 of the Oaths Act. Queen Empress v Alagu 16 M 421 = 1 Weir 175. Although a Magistrate might examine a person for the sake of obtaining information upon which a case might be stated against some person not before the Court he cannot examine him on oath as such person is not a witness. Hari Charan v Queen Empress 27 C 475 = 4 C W N 249. Whether a child understands the nature of oath or not, he should when examined as a witness be examined on oath or affirmation. Queen Empress v Sheoranian 8 C Outh 242, Empress v Saubhna 11 C P L R 16 Cr. Having regard to the language of the Oaths Act, neither a Judge nor a Magistrate has any option when once he has elected to take the statements of a person as evidence but to administer either an oath or an affirmation to such a person as the case may be. Queen Empress v Lal Sahai 11 A 183 = A W N 1899 65. Queen Empress v Maru 10 A 297. But in Golea Chetma v Emperor 15 Cr L J 161 = 22 Ind Cas 737, it has been held that although section 5 of the Oaths Act is imperative still section 13 of the Act governs the cases of this sort. Queen Empress v The effect of the omission to administer an oath to the interpreter under section 7 (b) of the Oaths Act is to render it necessary for the prosecution to prove that the interpretation was made accurately Rahhal v King Emperor, App 9 C L J 690=13 C W N 942

An enquiry on an application under s 100 Cr Pro Code, 1898 to issue a search warrant is judicial inquiry and proceedings preliminary to the issue of search warrant under s 100 are judicial proceedings. In the course of such judicial proceedings, the Magistrate would be empowered to examine persons on oath and such persons would be bound to take oath under s 5 of the Oaths Act and under s 14 of that Act would be bound to state the truth Abdul Aziz v Crown 34 P R 1916 Cr =17 Cr L J 491=36 Ind Cas 171

6 Where the witness, interpreter or juror is a Hindu or Muhammadan,

Affirmation by Native or by person objecting to oaths or has objection to making an oath, he shall, instead of making an oath, make an affirmation

In every other case, the witness, interpreter, or juror shall make an oath

Hindu and Mahomedan law on the subject. If we turn to India even prior to the introduction of English rule, we find that the Laws of Menu had their oath too, and in point of form, that prescribed by Menu is not very different from the English one — The imprecatory part too of the oath of Menu if not framed exactly in conformity with the varying Code of the religious belief of the swearer was nevertheless in a form adopted to the peculiarities of the influences by which each individual might be presumed to be most affected 'Let the Judge or the Priest to swear by his veracity, a Soldier by his horse or elephant and his weapons, a Merchant by his line, grain, and gold a Mechanic or servile man imprecating on his own head if he speak falsely all possible crimes. The meaning is he shall adjure a Brahmin by saying, if you speak falsely your truth will be destroyed a Cashetye by saying your horse or elephant and weapon become useless, a Vaisya 'your cattle seeds and gold will be unproductive. A Sudra he shall adjure by saying, 'if you speak falsely all sins will be on your head' (Macnaghten's Hindu Law Vol I 248). A course of imprecation though, by the way which seems to address itself rather to the punishment of a pre-ent life than a future one. This however appears not to have been the only cause of swearing. According to Mr Beaufort, the form of swearing by the water of the Ganges, and by copper and toolsy is virtually sanctioned by many shastras, but other prescribed forms are of equal validity, and all oaths made by laying the hand on any symbol or image of the Deity have the same obligation. The old Mahomedan Law indeed as administered in India did not require the oath to give validity to the evidence, even in judicial cases, but it contained no prohibition against it." Goodere Et pp 76 77. The Hindus and Mahomedans were allowed to give their evidence on solemn affirmation by Act V of 1840. Witnesses who are Hindus or Mahomedans, are exempt from taking oath. Bhai Khan v Emperor, 20 P R 1903 Cr =47 P L R 1902. The offence of giving false evidence may be committed, although the person giving evidence has been neither sworn nor affirmed. Gobind v Q I, 19 C 355

IV FORM OF OATHS AND AFFIRMATIONS

7 All oaths and affirmations made under section 3 shall be administered according to such forms as the High Court may from time to time prescribe

Forms of oaths and affirmations

And until any such forms are prescribed by the High Court, such oaths and affirmations shall be administered according to the forms now in use

Explanation—Repeated by the Lower Burma Courts
Act (VI of 1900) s 48 Schedule II

Forms of oath In Omichund v Barter, 1 Ark 15, Wills L C J said "The form of oaths varies in countries according to different laws and constitutions but the substance is the same in all. It would be absurd for him (i.e. Omichund who was a Hindu) to swear according to the Christiana oath which he does not believe, and therefore, out of necessity, he must be allowed to swear according to his own notion of the oath. In the same case Hardwick L C said "The next thing is the form of the oath. It is laid down by all writers that the outward act is not essential to the oath. It has been the wisdom of all nations to administer such oaths as are agreeable to the notion of the person taking." So where there was no prescribed form of oath, Lord Mansfield said "But as the purpose of it (oath) is to bind his conscience every man of every religion should be bound by that form which he himself thinks will bind his own conscience most." Atcheson v Sabine 2 Str 1101, R v Morgan 1 Leach Cr L 493, Alce v Reid, Peak N, Plas 23, R v Exchequer, C & M, 24. Edwards v Rous Ry & Moo 77. The usual form of oath in a criminal case at common law was as follows: "The evidence you shall give between clerk of arraigns or of the peace to desire the witness to take the book in his hand, and that done, to say to him 'The evidence you shall give between our sovereign lord the king and the prisoner at the bar shall be the truth the whole truth, and nothing but the truth' So help you God!'" Wigmore § 1818. The form of the administration of the oath is immaterial, provided that it involves in the mind of the witness the bracing of words or ceremonies are used in imposing punishment and cannot matter what words or ceremonies are used in imposing the oath provided he recognises them as binding by his belief. Indar Prasad v Lala Jagmohan, 11 O L J 485-84 Ind Cas 314.

Capacity to take oath—Children It was formerly thought that for children there was an age below which the incapacity to take the oath was beyond doubt and was to be regarded as always existing. This notion was probably due to the unwarranted transfer into the law of Evidence of some principles of substantive law, by which certain ages especially seven years were thought to mark the beginnings of capacity for various purposes. Young v Slaughterford 11 Mod Pl Cr 1 302, 634 Bulle. Nis Prius, 293. After much deliberation, where the Court said "An infant though under the age of seven years may be sworn in a criminal prosecution, provided such infant appears on a strict examination by the Court to possess a sufficient knowledge of the nature and consequences of an oath. For there is no precise or fixed rule as to the time with which infants are excluded from their answers to questions and imputations of falsehood which is to be collected from their answers to questions and imputations of falsehood which cannot be received. See also R v Holmes 2 F & F 783. Wigmore § 1821. Nisar v Emperor 18 C W N 147-41 C 400. Fatu v Emperor, 6 Pat L J 147-61. Ind Cas 705. Evidence of child witnesses can be admitted without oath or affirmation. In re Chinventadu 38 M 530. Hussain v Emperor 76 Ind Cas 1037. Hari Ramji v Emperor 20 Bom L R 365-45 Ind Cas 497. In the case of a child witness the Judge is bound first to ascertain by questioning the child whether it is by tender years prevented from understanding the questions put or from giving rational answers to those questions. Then if the Judge intend to take the statements of the child as evidence, he should proceed to administer the affirmation, but if he deliberately refrains from so doing, on the ground that the child cannot understand the nature of a solemn affirmation under section 13 of the Oaths Act, the deposition of the child will be admissible Empereor v Kussha, 5 Bom L R 551

App

8 If any party to, or witness in, any judicial proceeding Power of Court to ing offers to give evidence on oath or tender certain Oaths solemn affirmation in any form common amongst, or held binding by, persons of the race or persuasion to which he belongs, and not repugnant to justice or decency and not purporting to affect any third person, the Court may, if it thinks fit, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, tender such oath or affirmation to him

Scope of the section The term "party" to any judicial proceedings in this section does not include the complainant in a criminal proceeding nor he accused Sections 8 11 of the Oaths Act do not apply to criminal proceedings Queen Empress v Munaji, 13 B 389, Imperator v Haji Ali 5 S L R 129=13 Ind Cas 215=13 Cr L J 23, 1 Weir 822, Emperor v Chiman, 22 Bom L R 808=58 Ind Cas 147 Under the provisions of this Act, an oath proposed in a form which could affect a third party can not under any circumstances be lawfully administered Ram Narain v Babu Singh, 18 A 46 Nabi Baksh v Ram Jaiyaya 66 P R 1910=7 Ind Cas 479=114 P L R 1910 Fulsi Ram v Dayaram, 88 Ind Cas 448=23 A L J 513 Where the lower appellate Court, at the instance of the defendant, called upon the plaintiff to swear on the Koran, that the defendant's case was false, which the plaintiff refused to do held that the lower appellate Court was justified in raising a presumption from the plaintiff's refusal that his case was false, the Court having power to act as it did under the provisions of Act X of 1873 Issu Meah v Kalaram, 2 C L R 476, Ulagappa v Peria, 15 Ind Cas 195 But where defendant also refuses no presumption arises Sukdeo v Ganesh, 10 Ind Cas 472=7 N L R 50

Where in a suit, the parties put in a joint application evidencing an agreement to abide by the statement on oath of a certain person, but one of the parties thereto subsequently, asked them to withdraw from the reference on the ground of collusion of that person with the other party and no collusion was proved Held, he could not be allowed to do so Chuddu v Kuar Sen 3 A L J 651=29 A 40

An agreement to a case decided on the evidence of a third person given on oath, is in the nature of a reference to arbitration under the Civil Procedure Code and would be valid and binding on the parties to a suit if all of them join in it The provisions of ss 8 12 of the Oaths Act have no application to such a case Lalharaj Singh v Dullma, 4 A 302

Neither an invocation nor an oath or affirmation in the technical sense of the words is in any way an essential part of the special oath or solemn affirmation provided for in section 8 of the Indian Oaths Act of 1873 The special oath or solemn affirmation referred to in section 8 of the Act is something quite distinct from the ordinary oaths and affirmations referred to in section 5 The latter are to be in such form as the High Court prescribes, the first from its very nature, is independent of such administrative direction and must be in the form held binding by persons of the race to which the deponent belongs The special "oath or solemn affirmation", when permitted, is a complete substitute for the ordinary oath or affirmation and need not be supplemented by it or any part of it The words "oath" and "affirmation" used in respect of the special procedure provided for in section 8 are merely descriptive of the nature and suggestive of the consequences of the ritual—linking it up with ordinary oaths and affirmations—but are in no way connected with what its form should be Indar Prasad v Jogmohan Das, 31 C W N 1053=54 I A 301=2 Luck 316=46 C L J 13=39 M L T 618=53 V L J 1 (P C)=54 I A 301

HIL INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

The offer of the guardian of a minor defendant on behalf of the minor to make by the deposition to be given by a plaintiff on a special oath stands on a very different ground from an agreement or compromise contemplated by C.P. Code Order 32 r 7 and in such a case the minor is bound by the consent of his guardian although given without the leave of the Court provided there is no fraud or gross negligence on the part of the guardian Muhammad v Ishary Lal, A I R 1930 Cal 163

9 If any party to any judicial proceeding offers to be bound by any such oath or solemn affirmation as is mentioned in section 8, if such oath or affirmation is made by the other party to, or by any witness in, such proceeding, the Court may, if it thinks fit, ask such party or witness or cause him to be asked, whether or not he will make the oath or affirmation, Provided that no party or witness shall be compelled to attend personally in Court solely for the purpose of answering such question

Scope Under ss 8 and 9 of the Act it is not necessary that the form of oath should be specified before it can be held binding on the parties agreeing to be bound by it. It is sufficient if the oath is common among and held binding by the class to which the parties belong. Ishad Ali v Hanuman 29 P R 1887. If in the course of a suit the plaintiff offers to bind himself by the oath of a witness and the witness, after consenting to the offer, refused afterwards to take oath the Court cannot decree the suit in the plaintiff's favour even though the defendant had agreed to it in case the witness refused to take the oath. Sucha v Ratna, 31 P R 1888. A local commissioner appointed under the circumstances referred to in ss 8, 9 and 10 of the Oaths Act As the Oaths Act ss 8 to 12 draw a distinction between Court and persons authorised to take evidence the term does not include persons authorised to take evidence, such as a commissioner. Puran Chand v Chabar, 80 P R 1909 = 3 Ind Crs 621 = 143 P W R 1909. Ordinarily it is the party himself that can make an offer contemplated under this section. If however a party specially authorises his pleader, or an agent to make an offer to be bound by a particular oath he might be estopped from retracting the step he had taken if his offer were acted on. Sadasu v Maruti, 14 B 435. A offer taken in a particular form stands on a very different ground from an agreement or compromise contemplated by s 462, C.P. Code, 1892. In spite of the substance of the Court's sanction to the agreement under s 462, the minor defendant is barred by the consent of his guardian, if there is no fraud or negligence on the part of the latter. Sheo Narain v Suleh Lal 27 C 229 = 1 C W N 327. Chengal Reddi v Venkata, 12 M 483.

Where a plaintiff refuses to take an oath by which the defendant offered to be bound as provided by this section the refusal is a piece of conduct which the Court is entitled to consider along with other evidence. Saladeo v Ganesh 7 N L R 50.

A person, who under s 9 of the Oaths Act, agrees to be bound by an oath cannot retract. The agreement to be bound by an oath is in effect, an agreement to treat the evidence given under the oath as the evidence in the case and to dispense with other evidence. If the party who has agreed to be bound, prevents the oath being taken the other party is entitled to a decree at any rate where it is the plaintiff who agrees to be bound and the result of his refusal to allow the oath to be taken in the form agreed upon is that there is no evidence in support of his case Umriyamma v Mutiah, 17 M L J 99, see also Aima Begum v Muhammad Balsh, 63 P R 1881, Thoyi Ammal v Subbaraya, 22 M 234

App H

Where the defendant takes oath proposed by the plaintiff, the oath is conclusive Chhedi Lal v Jauala Prasad, 6 A L J 244=31 A 315=2 Ind Cas 201. The mere agreement of one of the parties to a judicial proceeding to be bound by the oath of the other is in itself no adjustment of the suit. If the party to be bound by the oath adheres, after the oath is taken, to the mode of disposal mentioned in the agreement, then it is an adjustment, and a judgment by consent may be recorded, for the consent then would be unqualified. If the matter stated in the agreement is sufficient as the ground of a decision a judgment may be passed, for then it would be conclusive evidence under the Oaths Act Tasudera v Warana 2 M 356. A duly authorized agent holding a special power of attorney from a party to a suit enabling him to conduct it in a manner he may deem fit can make an offer under s 9 of the Oaths Act, to be bound by the oath of the other party and to have the case decided in accordance therewith Wasu Aman v Farva Bibi, 14 A L J 38=38 A 131=32 Ind Cas 348.

Where the agreement proves abortive, a suit can be decided on evidence taken Seshagiri v Sanjay Sethi, 4 L W 253=1917 M W N 104=36 Ind Cas 1001. Where an offer is made by plaintiff to be bound by oath the Court has full discretion to call upon the defendant to accept or refuse the offer and subject to the exercise of that discretion, the offer once made stands, and if the defendant eventually accepts it, the plaintiff is bound by the result Khanaj Dun v Ali Nuri 65 Ind Cas 700. Section 9 is by no means mandatory and it seems that under certain special circumstances the Court may have discretion to refuse to refer the matter to the referee Manta Bibi v Khuda Balsh, 1923 A 65, but see Mithu Lal v Sipal 45 A 724=21 A L J 637= L R 4 A 596=74 Ind Cas 918, Ram Bhay v Dhuni Chand 92 Ind Cas 813=A I R 1926 Lah 240.

Ordinarily a party cannot resile from his offer, but he can do so with the permission of the Court Ram Bhay v Dhuni, 92 Ind Cas 813, Narayana v Srikantha, 4 Mys L J 217, Salil v Wali, 49 A 388=25 A L J 297=A I R 1927 All 590.

Where in certain divorce proceedings among Mahomedans the pleader for the wife applied that both parties should be put on special oath and the Court granted the application directing the parties to take the Oath in the form prescribed for 'Lann' under Mohomedan Law but there was nothing to show that the other party agreed to abide by such oath. Held that such oath could not be conclusive because of section 11 of the Oaths Act Khatiya Bibi v Umar Sahib, 52 B 295=110 Ind Cas 131=30 Bom L R 447=A I R 1928 B 287.

The word "party" in this section includes a duly authorised representative such as a pleader and that he can make the offer contemplated by the section Amu v Mohammad, 5 O W N 10.

A party cannot add a new condition to his original offer and the other party can take the oath in accordance with the original offer Kinkhi v Kunnath 1928 M W N 183=A I R 1928 Mad 488=109 Ind Cas 758.

10 If such party or witness agrees to make such oath

Administration of oaths. If a party or witness agrees to make such oath of affirmation, the Court may proceed to administer it or, if it is of such a nature that it may be more conveniently made out of Court, the Court may issue a commission to any person to administer it, and authorize him to take the evidence of the person to be sworn or affirmed and return it to the Court.

Scope. Under section 10 of the Oaths Act the agreement to take an oath must specify the form of oath and the place where the oath is to be adminis-

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

App H

tered An agreement by one party in general terms to take oath in any form or in any place that his adversary may like does not satisfy the requirements of section 10 Mangai v Paramayya, 9 Ind Cas 260=21 M L J 618 The procedure prescribed in the Act must be strictly followed, and it is only when an agreement is arrived at that the Court is empowered by s 10 of the Act, to administer the oath proposed The necessary procedure preliminary to the agreement must be adopted Krishna Rao v Srinivasa Rao, 7 V I T 286=9 Ind Cas 604 Under this section, the Court if it does not administer the oath itself must issue a Commission to some person to administer the authorise him to take the evidence of the person to be sworn and return it to the Court Madhoo v Gopal 7 C P I R 122 see also Dar Bar v Dar Meah, 17 Ind Cas 930=6 L B R 60

11 The evidence so given shall, as against the person who offered to be bound as aforesaid, be conclusive proof of the matter stated

Scope of the section The decision of an issue arrived at, under the provisions of the Act is not an adjudication operating as an estoppel in any future proceedings Keshava v Radham 5 M 209 This section does not apply to the evidence of a defendant who has been examined under the usual form of oath, and not under any oath or form of affirmation under s 8 Ram Jodan v Ram Kishan, 22 W R 337, see also Kashwan v Dhulu A W N 1895 183 Under section 11 it is the evidence so given which shall be against the person who offered to be bound by the oath be conclusive proof of the matter stated Madhoo v Gopal Bhaskar 7 C P I R 122 Suran v Devi 45 P R 1898, Hamid v Nagui 84 Ind Cas 729 Gramath v Siddappa 90 Ind Cas 577 (2)=49 M L J 379 A statement by a witness that a party is in possession in point of law admissible evidence of the fact that such party was in possession under section 11 of the Oaths Act it is conclusive proof of the matters stated The expression 'conclusive proof' in s 11 is to be understood in the sense in which it is defined by s 4 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 Filhu v Ramji 8 Bom L R 19=1 M L T 63

The parties to a suit agreed to be bound by the deposition of a referee in the manner contemplated by ss 10 and 11 of the Oaths Act, and a decree was passed in favour of one of the parties on the strength of that deposition The referee died afterwards and it was found on appeal that the said deposition did not fully cover the questions in issue between the parties Held that the case was therefore to be remanded to the lower Court for disposal according to the usual procedure Mahabir Prasad v Dat Misri, 13 A 386=A W N 1891, 143 There is nothing in the Indian Oaths Act constraining a Court to pass a decision in favour of a particular party If a party to a suit says that he would be bound by the oath of a particular person under the provisions of section 11 of the Act it means no more than this that pro tanto he will be bound that is will be conclusive as to the truth and the truth of each evidence will be conclusive as against him throughout the whole of the litigation But it does not in any way, compel the Court trying the case to accept that evidence as conclusive An attorney empowered generally to conduct a case and specifically to compromise it or refer it to arbitration on behalf of his client may bind him by offering the opposite party to take oath and the suit to be decided accordingly Anga Bishen v Malina 143 P L R 1903=8 P R 1903 see also Ghanib v Arim 72 P R 1874

Under this section the oath is not conclusive to the suit but is so only to the facts deposed to in the oath Jattanna v Bala Sheka 3 M L T 163, Lul Hussein v Badruddin 1 Bom L R 531 A defendant in a civil suit agreed to be bound by whatever statement might be made by the plaintiff upon oath as prescribed by law The plaintiff accordingly was examined on oath administered in the usual manner Held that, though the statement then made by the plaintiff might not be binding under the special provisions of section 11 of the Oaths Act 1873, nevertheless the defendant must be held bound by his agreement to rest the decision of the case upon the plaintiff's statement on oath Muhammad v Muhammad, A W N 1893, 500

The oath taken in one proceeding under the provisions of sections 8 11 of the Act is not binding in any subsequent proceeding Badiuddin v Aza muddin, 33 C 386=10 C W N 501

Where an appellate Court confirms the decree of the first Court on the strength of the oath of a party to the suit on a question of fact, the decree of the Court is none the less a final adjudication Ahmed v Mordin, 24 M 441

Where the plaintiff originally agreed to be bound by the oath of the defendant, if taken in a particular form and subsequently varied the agreement by attaching further conditions as to the way in which the oath should be made opportunity must be given to the defendant to take the oath in the manner originally agreed upon between the parties. If the defendant does so the evidence so given will be conclusive evidence of the facts to which it relates. If the defendant refuses to do so, the Court must proceed to dispose of the case on the merits Thullu v Kuppunda, 12 M L J 613

An adjudication by a Court on an oath made by one of the parties to the suit would make the matter or issue covered by the adjudication res judicata in a subsequent litigation between the same parties though the subject matter of the suit is different. Sanyal v Atul Suaro, 13 M L J 261=21 M L J 321=36 M 287=18 Ind Cas 835

An oath is under s 11 of the Oaths Act conclusive only as against the person who offered to be bound by it and not as against one who never joined in the challenge and such persons have the ordinary right of appeal against the decree Falanand v Iateh Din, 83 P R 1918=50 P W R 1918=45 Ind Cas 230

Where the agreement was to take the oath on a particular day but the oath was taken on a later day the burden lies on the person who relies on the oath to show that time was not the essence of the contract Athermantuth v Chandioth, 10 L W N 140=52 Ind Cas 619

When the plaintiff takes oath as desired by the defendant, the Court is bound to decide in favour of plaintiff Kanna v Nanda, 118 P R 1919=57 P L R 1919=49 Ind Cas 1005

Where an offer is made by the guardian of the minor defendant to the plaintiff as regards the truth of a certain fact, the minor defendant is bound by the statement of the plaintiff made under specified oath Parbhu v Jamil 19 A L J 911

Where the complainant offers to be bound by the statement made by the accused if he made the statement after walking several steps towards the Ganges and the accused made the statement under these conditions the statement being made on oath was conclusive proof of the facts set forth in it Dilsulh v Raja Rama, L R 5 A 147

This section does not provide that the evidence given on oath shall be conclusive proof of the matter stated, but it provides that as against the person who offers to be bound by the special oath, it would be conclusive proof of the matter stated. Section 11 of the Oaths Act does not prevent the Court from attempting to establish that a particular statement made by the appellant on oath was false in fact and false to his knowledge. In other words it is open to the Court to establish that by making that statement the appellant gave false evidence within the meaning of s 193 I P Code Ramdas Bishnu Das Ime, 26 Bom L R 713=82 Ind Cas 359=25 Cr L J 1287

There is nothing in the Oaths Act which says that the reference to the referee comes to an end as soon as the referee has once been examined. The referee can be re-examined if all the points which would be necessary to be established are not put to him. Radha Krishen v Kasku Nath, 48 A 276=A L J R 1926 All 266=24 A L J 241

App H

For the application of section 11 of the Oaths Act it is necessary that the statement given by a referee should amount to "evidence" of the fact in controversy between the parties. Ratu Ram v Handeru, 103 Ind Cas 718=A I R 1927 All 676

When a party to a suit undertakes to abide by the oath taken by a particular person and the person merely takes the oath, he cannot afterwards say that he will not abide by the oath. Chett Ram v Bhup Singh, 98 Ind Cas 861=A I R 1927 F 49

Where a party agrees that he would be bound by the oath of a witness, though the other parties do not agree to be so bound, he will be bound and the case must be tried only as against the others. Ram Ratan v Ram Lal 27 A L J 1097=118 Ind Cas 183=A I R 1929 A 779

12 If the party or witness refuses to make the oath or solemn affirmation referred to in section 8, he shall not be compelled to make it, but the Court shall record, as part of the proceedings, the nature of the oath or affirmation proposed, the facts that he was asked whether he would make it, and that he refused it, together with any reason which he may assign for his refusal.

Scope of the section. Under section 12 of the Act, it is only when a party refuses to make the oath proposed that the Court is bound to record that he was asked if he would make it and that he refused to do so. Madhogir v Gopal 7 C P L R 122. This section directs the Court to record, as part of the proceedings, the nature of the oath proposed, the fact that the party was asked to make the oath and refused together with any reason assigned for the refusal. The section seems to contemplate that the Court shall give such weight as it may think fit, to the fact that a party has offered to make an oath and has afterwards refused to make it whilst it negatives the view that the refusal to make the oath is, in itself, a ground for dismissing the suit or giving the plaintiff a decree as the case may be. Mayan v Pathu Kuthi 17 M L J 545=31 M I per C J. It may be doubted whether this section was intended to apply to a case, in which the parties have arrived at an agreement that one of them shall take an oath. Ibid, per Miller J. By an agreement between the parties to a suit the plaintiff agreed that he should take an oath, and that on his failure to do so the suit should be dismissed. Held on the failure of the plaintiff to take the proposed oath that the agreement could not be recorded as an adjustment of the suit and the suit should be proceeded with. Mayan v Pathu Kuthi, 17 M L J 545=31 M L T 98=31 M I.

Where the plaintiff offered to be bound by any statement recorded by the defendant as to his indebtedness in the plaintiff's book, the failure on the part of the plaintiff to produce the account book is equivalent to failure to take an oath, or refusal to be bound by an oath. Anunchand v Gobind Sahai 5 P R 1003=37 P L R 1903.

A Court is not entitled to presume because a party refuses to take a special oath that his case is false. In the absence of anything on the record to show the reasons for the refusal, no inference can be drawn. Amantulla v Chhattoo, 93 Ind Cas 830=A I R 1926 Cal 817.

Where the plaintiff after agreeing to abide by the oath of a third person subsequently declined to abide by it the Court has no power to dismiss the plaintiff's suit on account of the plaintiff not having taken the oath but must either proceed to administer the oath and decide the case in accordance therewith or accept the plaintiff's refusal to abide by the oath drawing such inference from the refusal as is permissible and then proceed with the trial of the case in accordance with law. Babu Ram v Nathu Ram, 99 Ind Cas 288=A I R 1927 Lrh 78.

V MISCELLANEOUS

App I

- 13 No omission to take any oath or make any affirmation, no substitution of any one for any other of them, and no irregularity whatever in the form in which any one of them is administered, shall invalidate any proceeding or render inadmissible any evidence whatever, in or in respect of which such omission substitution or irregularity took place or shall affect the obligation of a witness to state the truth

Proceeding and evidence not invalidated by omission of oath or irregularity

Scope The evidence of a boy aged 10 to whom no oath or affirmation was advisedly administered was held admissible Budha v Empress, 31 P R 1889 Cr The omission in the above section includes any omission and is not limited to accidental or negligent omission Empress v Sanbhairu 11 C P L 11 Cr 16, Queen Empress v Vnaperumal 16 M 105 per Parker J, Golla Chinna v Emperor, 15 Cr L J 161=22 Ind Crs 737, Queen v Sheo Bhogla 23 W R Cr 12, Emperor v Kusha, 5 Bom L R 551, Queen Empress v Shara, 16 B 359, Queen v Ananta 22 W R Cr 1, Q v Perumal, 1 Weir 827 (F N) Queen v Ituraja 22 W R Cr 14 Bulchand v Faral Nath, 18 C W N 1323, Nafar v Emperor 18 C W N 147=41 C 406 Dham v Emperor, 13 A L J 1072, Emperor v Hari 20 Bom L R 365 Emperor v Sashi, 24 C W N 767, Fatu v Emperor, 6 Pat L J 147, Hussain v Emperor, 1923 Lah 332, but see Queen Empress v Vnaperumal, 16 M 105 per Collins C J, Queen v Masu, 10 A 207=A W N 1888 86 Pau Nyun v King Emperor, 2 L B R 322, Dana v King 0 Bur L 1 133=36 Ind Crs 468 If the jury in a Sessions trial are not sworn, the omission is one which could be covered by this section Queen v Ramsdoy, 26 W R Cr 19 This section has no application to the evidence of a witness taken on commission in a foreign territory Kadambine v Kumudine, 30 C 934=7 C W N 806 This section applies to deposition taken by Registrar of the Presidency Court of Small Causes at Calcutta Bulchand v Faral Nath 18 C W N 1323

Askin, whether a person would take oath and not recording the fact and not actually offering the oath are irregularities vitiating the trial Afsan Khan v Shabu 1922 Cal 148

- 14 Every person giving evidence on any subject before any Court or person hereby authorised to administer oaths and affirmations shall be bound to state the truth on such subject

Persons giving evidence bound to state the truth

Scope Section 132 of the Evidence Act read with s 14 of the Oaths Act, compels a witness to answer examining questions and he is protected by the proviso to s 132 from a criminal prosecution for any offence for which he criminales himself directly or indirectly by his answer, except a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer Queen Empress v Ganu Singh 12 B 410

Amendment of Penal Code ss 178 and 181

- 15 The Indian Penal Code, sections 178 and 181 shall be construed as if, after the word "oath" the words "or affirmation" were inserted

- 16 Subject to the provisions of sections 3 and 5, no person appointed to any office shall, before entering on execution of the duties of his office, be required to take any oath, or to make or subscribe any affirmation or declaration whatever

Official oaths to be taken

SUBJECT INDEX

Abbreviations evidence of 1021
Absence of entry, if inadmissible 170 of substantive evidence 1369
Abortion evidence of 370
Acceptance of evidence of 1021

Abortion evidence of 270
Acceptance of lease, under coercion if bindings, 1203
Accomplice 1269
and informer distinction between 1273 evidence and corroboration in practice

1273 evidence and corroboration, 1275
in particular crimes, 1272
meaning of 1270
who are not 1272
count books of

Account books if evidence 591
nature of 574
rules to 616
Accused

Accused—approver & evidence of bad character if not reasons for bad character if not reasons who are not

Act preamble whether a part of 2
Acts or records of 1

Acts or records of the acts meaning
of, 862
to show intent or plan where not possible 771
Acquaintance with

Acquaintance 571 writing, other means of 695
Acquiescence 117
Adoption 117

Adoption of evidence by conduct 70
Admissibility jurisdiction nature of 11
Admissibility grounds of 11

Admissibility of evidence by conduct to multiple rounds of objection to applicable to more than one pur pose

ru' a t f e f r e r t o k n o w l e d g e

...of the ... in
... of the ...
... of the ...
... of the ...

...the ... of ...

...the ... of ...

Journal of Management Education 30(6)

Admission—continued by co-plaintiff or co-defendant if receivable, 311
by former owner of land, how far receivable against the subsequent owner, 321
by guardian of

owner, 321
by surrender if receivable, 311
by interpreter, its effect, 31 by life estate holder and remainder man how far receivable, 326 by mistake, what it is, 159 by partners and joint contractors, its effect of, 309
by persons, 311

by persons expressly referred to by the persons who have provided proved against party to suit 329 by pleaders, attorney and counsla if bind the client 308

by pleading 764

by pleading as distinguished from evidentiary admission 760
by reference its effect 323
by wife if binding on husband cannot be proved 323

... if ... on his hand ...
 cannot be proved in favour of the party making it ...
 ... of ...
 ... of ...
 ... of ...

tion for statement of fact upon t int to death not necessary term of 291

form of 291
of irrelevant (vid nec, retro pect in English law 197
ere & where relevant the criminal law 197

pl-adms what they are that pl-adms when could

...value and in the 255
...not part of it
...top of it

...top 120
...of 270 14
...taken as a whole 2-4 100
...proportion of conf 2-4 100
...the whole when with the

On 27 Feb when the 1st Poln

... of a ...
... of a ...
... of a ...

1. The first step is to identify the problem or goal. This involves understanding the current situation and what needs to be achieved.

Admission—concluded

- of explanatory facts, its basis, 140
- of improper evidence by consent, nature of 360
- of insolvents, how far receivable, 327
- of one party, where parties giving or sued in representative character, if receivable 313
- of persons having joint interests, if receivable 317
- on points of law, nature of, 293
- or confession, circumstances strengthening testimony to, 367
- or confession circumstances weakening to 367
- to whom to be made, 291
- when not put to the party, nature of 1332
- where to be made, 847
- whether operates as estoppel 1170
- whether subject to rules of testimonial qualifications such as personal knowledge, infancy, opinion rule, etc 284
- direct, meaning of, 281
- indirect, meaning of 281
- prohibitive status of Prof Wigmore's views, 282
- received on which principle 282
- Adverse witness meaning of 1351
- Advice sought for miscellaneous non legal purpose if privileged, 1244
- to tell the truth if violates expression, 390
- Affidavit, what is an, 560
- Agent's declaration, effect of, 303
- Agents, of Corporation effect of their declaration, 303
- Agreement, varying terms of document, who may give evidence of, 1022
- to commit breach of contract, if a conspiracy 153
- Agree to admit at the hearing, meaning of, 763
- to admit by any writing before the hearing, meaning of, 764
- Alibi, the theory of, 100
- the theory of and its explanation, 165
- Altered instrument, burden of, 1064
- Ambiguities, evidence of 1012
- extensive evidence when not admissible 1000
- extensive evidence as to, 999
- similar law, 996
- Ancient document, corroborative evidence, 903
- Ancient instruments, evidentiary value of, 223
- Anonymous instances to rebut interest, 236

- Antecedent conduct, if evidence, 120
- Appendix A, 1105
- Appendix B 1116
- Appendix C, 1135
- Appendix D 1170
- Appendix E, 1477
- Appendix F, 1478
- Appendix G, 1482
- Appendix H, 1487
- Arbitration proceedings, if can be used to refresh memory, 1381
- Assignee of landlord tenant prevented from questioning the title of 1204
- Assurance that "what you say will be used for you" or used against you "if exclude a confession," 392
- that "you had better confess" if excludes a confession 392
- Attendance of witness, nature of 1293
- of witnesses, Rule of 1293
- Attesting witness when denies, procedure in such case, 489
- Attesting witness when does not recollect, procedure in such case, 850
- Attestation by a scribe 834
- by a sub registrar 835
- meaning of 831
- of documents calling of witness 825
- of documents history of the rule 826
- Attessor must be competent at the time of attestation 816
- of a document if and when estopped 1170
- Attessor's hearsay statement, how admissible, 853
- Auction, purchaser at sale for arrears of revenue or at execution sales if bound by the latches of the late proprietor, 322
- Bad character irrelevant unless evidence has been given that he has a good character, 725
- previous not relevant, 721
- Bankers Books Evidence Act 1452
- Batwara paper, if a public document 596
- if evidence to prove tenancy, 222
- Beginning of the tenancy, meaning of 1201
- Benam, estoppel as to, 1187
- Bias, corruption etc, how proved 1417
- Birth, during marriage, conclusive proof of legitimacy, 1094
- register if admissible 596
- Blanks and ambiguities, 998
- Body, state of, or bodily feeling, if admissible 247
- Books referred to by Courts 739
- Breach of contract if relevant in mitigation of damages, 176

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

Brokers book and bought and sold note value of 921	Burden of proof of—	declaratory title 1011
Burden of proof 1012,	deduction 1011	deeds, 1013
meaning the duty of one party or the other to introduce evidence 1027	document 1011	document 1011
to particular facts 1031	enhancement of rent 1013	execution, 1015
to relation between partners, landlord and tenant, principal and agent, 1059	fact to be proved to make evidence admissible, 1012	fact specially with knowledge, 1055
to ownership 1031	fraud 1011	good faith 1016
illustrative cases 1033	land revenue 1016	guardian and ward 1016
its origin and place in the law of evidence, 1025	Hindu law adoption 1017	Hindu law alienation by Hindu widow, 1016 meaning of the term 1026	Hindu law alienation by minor or guardian 1017	Hindu law alienation by Shikhar 1017
of fact specially with knowledge, not a general rule 1029	Hindu law inheritance 1017	Hindu law joint family 1017
on whom lies 1029	Hindu law partition 1017	Hindu law self acquisition 1015
that person is alive who has not been heard of for seven years 1036	Hindu law stridhan, 1015	Hindu 1015
that a person is dead comes within exception 1031	income tax 1018	insolvency, 1015
to show the voluntary and free character of the confession and whether shifts, 1028	insurance 1018	invention, 1018
Burden of proof of which transfer in possession 1031	jurisdiction 1018	lakshmi and rent from land 1019
account 1031	land acquisition, 1019	landlord and tenant 1019
acknowledgment 1037	limitation 1019	limitation 1019
acquiescence, 1037	malicious prosecution, 1019	marriage, 1070
adverse possession 1035	mercantile usages 1050	mesne profits 1050 agriculture, 1036	minor 1050	mortgage 1050
alluvion and Dikhuwa 1036	notice 1050	partition, 1051
will dating, 1036	pardanashan ladies, 1051	partnership, 1051
appeal 1036	perpetual and permanent settlements 1051	possession 1051 appropriation 1036	postscript of letter 1052	pre-emption 1052 arbitration 1036	promissory note, 1052	railway cases 1052
attachment of land 1037	recital in a deed or other instrument 1052	record of right 1052
auction purchaser 1037	release 1052	rent 1053
avoidance of encumbrance, 1057	sale, 1053 award 1037 badminton, 1037
banking transaction 1037 bill of lading 1038 bill of exchange 1038
bond 1038
boundary dispute 1038 carrier 1039
Civil Procedure, 1039
collusion 1039
consideration 1040 contract 1041
contention 1041 conversion 1042 criminal cases, 1042 custom 1042 damages 1042
debt and debtor, 1042

Burden of proof of—concluded scale for arrears of revenue 1051 specific performance, 1053 vendor and purchaser, 1053

wills 1053

proving death of person known to have been alive within thirty years, 1065

Business, course of, meaning of, 276*Calling the other party as a witness when allowed, 1351*Caste or class custom, what it is 193*Character as affecting danger, 727 kind of, veracity as the fundamental quality, 1375

meaning of 711, 712 1331

of prosecutor when relevant 727 to prove conduct imputed irrelevant in civil cases, 713

Character evidence, as provided in section 54, 735

English law on, 731

Court's conclusion except so far as such appears from facts otherwise relevant, 715

if admissible in suits for defamation 723

in an action for breach of promise 730 in an action for criminal conversion, 730

in an action for fraud, 716

in an action for indecent assault, 730 in an action for malicious prosecution, 731

in an action for seduction 729

Rule under the Indian Evidence Act, 735

where it is admissible 716

Child witness Court's duty as 1218*Chittas, if admissible 606

maps, etc., nature of, 864

Circumstances identifying a person, 141

identifying a person, criminality of act immaterial, 142

may create presumption of death at earlier period, 1069

Circumstantial evidence two kinds of, real and personal, 50*Coercion or intimidation proof of, 960*Collusion meaning of, 652*Combination to commit crime, if punishable, 15*Combination to commit tort, if punishable, 152

to do outrageous acts, if a conspiracy, 153

Commission of crime by a third person, if evidence, 166*Communications, between conspirators, if evidence, 157 distinguished from acts, client's conduct, appearance, abode etc., 1251 during marriage, 1230

which are not privileged, 1257

which are privileged, cases of, 1257 made to Counsel or attorney in the course and for the purpose of employment, nature of, 1248

Comparison of handwriting—value of 859

of writing, etc., meaning of, 858 of writing—the genuineness of the standard, 858

Competency, how to ascertain, 1217*Complaint in answer to question, if relevant 132

in cases of ripe criminal assault etc if relevant, 130 in other cases, if admissible 132

when relevant, 130

when to be made, 131

Conduct as evidence of consciousness of innocence, 126

if relevant 118

its criminality, if material when it is otherwise relevant, 119

meaning of, 118

of the accused in attempting to stifle or thwart investigation, evidence of guilt, 127 of the defendant if admissible in action for libel 177 regarding a document, when relevant, 128

confession and section 364 Criminal Procedure Code, 370 and section 533 of Criminal Procedure Code, 371 and section 80 of the Evidence Act, 372

bearing involuntary—circumstances under which 388

by accused while in custody of police not to be proved against him 107

by promise of immunity from prosecution if admissible, 390 caused by inducement threat or promise when irrelevant in criminal proceeding, 355 definition of, 402

division of 361

extra judicial—proof of corpus delicti as corroboration 361

if can be used to refresh memory 1381

Confession if received, when the inducement is at an end, 388

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

Confession—continued

implicating the confessing prisoner more than co prisoner in the commission of the offence, charged against all nature of 418 implicating the confessing prisoners substantially to the same extent as the co prisoners in the commission of the offence nature of 149 implicating the maker in a lesser degree, value of 449 in answer to questions if to be rejected, 436 made after removal of impression caused by inducement, threat or promise if relevant, 429 made by signs or gestures, if admissible 378 made in police custody whether admissible, 409 made in the presence of a Magistrate if admissible 410 made to one person, when the inducement etc, is held out by a different person, if relevant 377
meaning of, 355, 445
must be taken as a whole 361
nature of 919
of accused taken in accordance with law, 877 of a co accused and its relation to the evidence of an accomplice, 435 of a co accused must be corroborated 432 of an accused in a joint trial to be admissible must affect himself and some other 447 of co accused when inadmissible under other provisions, if admissible against such other persons and against himself under section 30 455 otherwise relevant not to become irrelevant because of promise of secrecy etc 133 principle of admission 358 retracted—corroboration of 392 retracted, when admissible 411 to police officer, if admissible 403 to police officer not to be proved 397 to police officer difference between English and Indian law 397 uncorroborated evidentiary value of 367 use of in evidence its history and development 39 voluntarily made if evidence though there was want of warning 172 weight of 161
what are not, 359

Confession—concluded

when caused by inducement threat or promise, 185 Confidential communication with legal advisers, 1260 official business—nature of, 1238 Consideration of agreement illegality of, proof of, 961 proved confession affecting person making it and others jointly under trial for same offence 438 different from that contained in reciprocal proof of, 963 Conspiracy—Acquittal of some, 161
meaning of 150
proof of, 153
Constitution and government of any religious or charitable foundation evidence as to 703
Construction—always to be beneficial 7
American cases, value of 24
English cases, value of, 23 every word should receive proper construction 16 exception of the doctrine of state decisions, 21 heading of chapters whether to be regarded as preamble to sections 13 heading of sections whether to be regarded as preamble to sections 13 illustration and marginal notes which is to be preferred, 16 illustrations whether the law themselves showing by example what it is, 15 imposed by statutes, 11 legislative proceedings whether to be ascertained 12 mandatory provision if imperative or only directory 22 marginal notes whether part of the Act 11 maxim—Expressio Unius est exclusio altera—if to be applied, 17
'may' if mean shall 16
'means' and 'includes' when used by the Legislature 22 new words if to be supplied when the contract so requires 16 no addition or omission of words into Act 5 of codifying Act 9 of consolidating Act 11 objects and reasons of a bill whether to be referred to 12 of the statute according to context and external facts 6 of penal statutes, 19 of statutes ousting jurisdiction, 16

Construction—concluded

- of statutes, when language is plain, 4
- “or” “and” if stand one for the other, 16
- previous state of the law whether to be considered, 12
- principle of ejusdem generis if applicable, 20
- proviso, its scope, 22
- proviso, how to be considered, 11
- punctuation, whether part of the Act, 11
- repeal by implication if favoured, 17
- report of the select committee whether to be referred to, 13
- same expression used in same meaning, 7
- saving clause, if it can extend in enactment or can give a new or different effect to the previous sections of the enactment, 23
- schedule, whether a part of the statute, 14
- scope of the doctrine of stare decisis, 20
- special Act not affected by general act, 7
- to avoid inconvenience, 7
- Constructive estoppel nature of, 1182
- Contemporaneous conduct, meaning of, 122
- Contents of a document cannot be proved by oral evidence, 769
- or condition of any document with which he has become acquainted nature of, 1249
- Continuous narration without question, 1302
- Contract, terms of proof of, 911
- Conventional custom and usage, 18
- Conversation, Rule as to, 616
- Conviction whether illegal for want of corroboration, 1284
- Copy of document to refresh memory when witness may use, 1374
- old deed, nature of, 901
- Copy right infringement common source, how far a defence, 271
- Corporal effects—illustrative cases of, 107
- instances of, 107,
- Corroboration—amount of, 1286
- as to the identity of prisoner, 1278
- conviction if illegal for want of, 1284
- of evidence of accomplice if required, 1112
- nature and extent of, 1281
- statements made to police by third parties in the course of investigation whether can be used as, 1371

Counsel—duty of, 1300

- engaged in a case, nature of, 1222
- Course of business in private firms if relevant, 276
- Court's decision, where a portion of evidence is untrue, 774
- discretion in admitting statements, 617
- Courts—may direct person to write in its presence, 839
- may dispense notice in a fit case, 83
- may presume existence of certain facts, 1107
- Courts to decide when question shall be asked and when witness compelled, 1337
- Cross examination—1298
- and confrontation not possible in Her Majesty's evidence, 779
- art of, 1309
- as a destructive and vital feature of English law, 1304
- as to previous statements in writing, 1327
- by Court, 1307
- by Court, nature of, 1307
- David Paul, Brown's golden rules for, 1310
- length of, 1308
- nature of, 1303
- of expert witness, 1314
- of person called to produce a document, 1317
- of police witness, 1313
- of spy as a witness, 1313
- of the perjured witness nature of, 1311
- of truthful witness, 1313
- of woman witness, 1315
- on answers given to the Court if allowed, 1395
- opportunity of, whether relevant to actual cross examination, 1305
- nature of question in, 1341
- right of, 1306
- to discover who he is and what is his position etc, 1331
- to test witness's veracity, 1333
- theory of, 1301
- whether should be combined to relevant facts, 1308
- Cross examining his own witness effect of, 1356
- Custom and usage, distinction between, 186
- ambiguity of, 188
- certainty of, 189
- continuity of, 189
- its obligation, 190
- legal and conventional, 185
- meaning of, 709

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

Custom—concluded

- meaning of under section 1319b
 not to be immoral or unreasonable, 190 or usage must be consistent with the contract, 987
 or usage proof of 987
 reasonableness of, 189 should occur substantially under conditions substantially similar to that in question 192
 what it is 184
 Customary rights in law, etc 192
 Customs how to be proved, 533 Damage, definition of 171
 in cases of torts 175 its measure in cases of breach of contract, 175
 its amount how ascertained, 174
 Dealer with partnership, knowledge of dissolution, 240
 Dealings of agent nature of 1089 of husband and wife, nature of, 1090 of medical attendant and patients,
 nature of 1091
 of other persons nature of, 1091 of parent and child, nature of 1089 of purchaser and seller, nature of 1092 of solicitor or pleader and client
 nature of, 1090
 of spiritual adviser, nature of 1090 Death by other means evidence of 265 by poisoning evidence of 264 of referee if affects the admission liability 333
 register if admissible 596
 of witness after examination in chief,
 effect of 1307
 Declaration recomprizing acts form ing part of the same transaction 83
 act or omission must be of an unequivocal and unambiguous character in order to create an estoppel—1172
 against interest and admissions 515
 as to public or general interest 724 Declarations falling under verbal act doctrine as distinguished from spontaneous exclamation 94 kind of 86
 of one identified in interest against such party if admissible in evidence, 317
 of intent threat etc if admissible under this section whether an exception to the Hearsay Rule 92
- Debt acknowledgment of, secondary evidence of, 919
 Decree of a co-sharer in a rent suit, if admissible 203
 Defendant's fortune, if admissible 178
 Definition of affidavits, 32 of British India, 30 proceedings before Arbitrator what it means 32
 what is a Court martial 32
 what is a judicial proceeding 30
 Degree of probative value required, 168
 Delay in prosecution effect of 126
 Demeanour during trial, if admissible, 127 when charged, of accused if admissible 124
 Deposition before any person authorised by law if admissible 561 before committing Magistrate nature
 of, 1371
 before Magistrate, nature and use
 of, 1331
 of partners if evidence, 701 previous to be recorded according to law, 561
 proof of, 918
 inaccurate effect of, 1009
 Design or system theory of evidencing,
 what it is 236
 Distinction or non production of documents etc., as evidence against the party itself effect of 127 Diligence necessary if witness be arrest 345
 Disclaimer of right to evict effect of, 1204 Discovery must be in consequence of information 417
 Discrepancies between witness effect
 of 775
 Document nature and policy of the general rules, 826 attestation of, person and policy of the old rule 827
 attestation Reason of the departure from the old rule and principle underlying section 68 between strangers if admissible 165 contents of when oral admissions are relevant 315 called for and produced on notice, given as evidence 1397
 inadmissible for want of registration, whether secondary evidence is admissible 913
 interpretation of 44
 in virtue of which he holds the property as pledgee or mortgagor, if to be produced, 1261

Document continued

- in the hands of obligor, pre-umption from, 1121
- matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of, 915
- meaning of, 798
- meaning, to be ascertained from the whole of it, 1003
- not properly attested, effect of, 840
- not properly stamped, admissibility of other evidence, 914
- plain in itself, 1002
- proof by primary evidence, 793
- by production of certified copies, 868
- production of, which another person having possession could refuse to produce, 1264
- rule as to, 616
- required to be certified, 870
- thirty years old proper custody, 897
- thirty years' old, unsuspicious appearance 900
- thirty years rule document must purport to be in the hand writing of any particular person 897
- the production of which might tend to criminate him 1266
- unstamped, secondary evidence
of, 799
- when he has received Ex scriptis
olim visis 692
- Documentary evidence of, 782
- meaning of 782
- three distinct questions with regard to, 783
- Draft record of right, if admissible 222
- Drunkness, if disability of witness 1220
- intention how affected by 239
- Due execution, want of, proof of, 961
- Dumb witness, 1222
- Duty of Court in cases of witnesses of tender year 1217
- of the person alleging the case to prevent it, 1026
- Dying declarations, cases of, 487
- difference between English and Indian law, 475
- form of, 480
- how admissible, 878
- in the form of questions and answers 486
- must be taken as a whole, 457
- proof of 481
- subject matter of 477
- testimonial impeachment and rehabilitation 480
- testimonial qualification of the decla-rant in, 179
- value of as evidence, 484

Dying declarations—concluded

- value of in India 485
- when admissible under English law 473
- Effect of Judicial notice, not conclusive, 759
- of production or non production of documents, 818
- Embezzlement evidence of 269
- Enactments repealed by Act 1401
- English law or prior admission against written document 347
- Entries in books of account regularly kept in the course of business 580
- absence of 582
- how to be proved 583
- English law 576
- English rule as to History of the exception 375
- if sufficient evidence 586
- old law under Act II of 1855 577
- some proved bogus, if whole disredited, 586
- when relevant 574
- Entries, in certified copy if relevant 597
- in official public book, absence of 601
- in public record, English Law as to 590
- in public record personal knowledge of the person making entry if necessary 588
- in public record, nature of 591
- in Riwayat nature of, 595
- in Wajih al arq, nature of 594
- Escrow prior evidence, 973
- Estoppel 1140
- one against another, 1187
- against a minor 1167
- against law 1171
- and adoption, 1178
- and order of Court, 1178
- and judicial admission, nature of conclusiveness, 1143
- a rule of evidence, 1141
- is to license of a person in possession, 1206
- as to negotiable instrument, 1208
- between bulor and bulor, 1209
- between landlord and tenant, 1182
- between licensee of patent and patentee 1121
- between mortgagee and mortgagor, 1207
- between warehouse man and buyer, 1213
- binds the person and his representatives, 1180
- by acts of agents, 1186
- by acts of Government Officer, 1180

HINDU WIDOW ACT

Estoppel—concluded

by conduct, nature of 1159
by deed, meaning of 1143 by election, nature of 1187
by matter of record, 1113
by misrepresentation declaration act or omission, 1150
by omission, nature of, 1176
by negligence, nature of 1155 by representation, change of position brought about it, 1156
by waiver, nature of, 1177 different kinds of, according to English law, 1141 does not arise, when the truth of the matter known to both the parties 1150
equitable in cases of past performance 1178

rejection of the doctrine in modern times 1145

in case of Hindu widow 1187

in cases of receipt in document 1144

in equity, nature of, 1149

in pais, meaning of, 1145 intentionally, meaning of, 1171 is neither admission for preump-

tion 1112

its basis on equity 1119

meaning of 1140

no tenant permitted during the continuance of the tenancy to deny the right of the landlord, 1199 of acceptor of bill of exchange, holder or licensee 1203

of tenant and licensee of person in possession 1191

proof of 1171

other cases, 1155

whether applicable in criminal cases 1119

whether can arise when document is inadmissible, 1182

whether should be pleaded, 1151

whether should be pleaded, 1151

whether should be pleaded, 1151

whether should be pleaded, 1151

whether should be pleaded, 1151

whether should be pleaded, 1151

Evidence—concluded

as to documents, meaning in reference to extrinsic facts, 1001 as to matter in writing, 1326
as to meaning of illegible characters, etc., 1016

classification defective, 43 difference between oral and documentary, 47

different meanings of, 45

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

direct and circumstantial, 48

Examination in chief, 1298 advocate may allow witness in his own way, 1302 continuous narration by the witness without question, if allowed, 1302 duty of Counsel, 1300 importance of, 1299
 Paul Brown's golden Rule, 1301 rule regulating, 1299
 rule as to, 1299
Examination in chief of witnesses, 1293
 order of production, 1293
Exclusion of admission, reason of, 351 of evidence against application of document to existing facts, 1000 of evidence to contradict answers to questions testing veracity, 1343 of evidence of oral agreement 926 of evidence to explain or amend ambiguous document 994 of oral by documentary evidence, 905 of witness from Court room, Court's discretion as to, 1294
Execution of document required by law to be attested, proof of, 826 proclamation nature of, 608
Existence as distinguished from terms of contracts of a grant or any other disposition of property, 925
 of course of business, when relevant 273
Expert evidence and commission, 685 and personal knowledge, 672
 as to foreign laws, 673 to prove handwriting when admissible, 681 Expert in agriculture 676
 in insurance 676
 mode of examination of, hypothetical questions 676 opinion of, facts bearing upon, 686
Expert testimony value of, as regards handwriting, 682 for proving handwriting handwriting of 680 on science or art, 674
 whether preliminary question for the Court, 670
Expert witnesses, artists and scientists, 676 hypothetical questions on cross examination 672 may be witness of both the parties, 673
 meaning of, 667
 Mechanics and mechanics 676
 Physicians or surgeons, 674 to refresh memory 1351
Explanation 2, of section 3, its scope, 133

Explanation—continued

of possession not inconsistent with the identity of possession, 1109 Explanatory facts, if relevant 138
External circumstances as evidencing knowledge, belief or consciousness 237
Extrinsic evidence in cases of other documents 990
 in Will cases, 988
 to control document inadmissible 936 to annex a date to written instrument 982
Extortion and black mail evidence of 269
Facts admitted before the arbitrators if admissible 354 admitted need not be proved, 761 bearing on question whether act was accidental or intentional—if admissible 260 Bentham's definition and omission of 39 as to the existence of which the Court has to form an opinion must be of public nature 609 classification of 104 declared to be relevant 69 different meaning of 38 inconsistent with any facts in issue what it means 165 in issue meaning of 69
 in issue, what are they 43 judicially noticeable need not be proved, 739 kinds of, narrated statements of past events and condition excluded, 42 legal meaning of 35 matter of fact and matter of law 41 meaning of fact in understanding a Statute, 41 not relevant in cross-examination 1308 need not to explain or introduce relevant facts, 137 not otherwise relevant what it means 165
 not relevant in cross-examination 1309 physical or physiological 9 positive or negative 41
 relevant 42
 relevant when right or custom in question 176 peculiarly within the knowledge of any person burden of proof of 652 showing existence of State of mind or of body or bodily feeling if relevant, 22

III INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

Facts—concluded

- to that of relevancy of 12
- verifying time and place if admissible 146
- what is the real meaning of 39
- when not otherwise relevant become relevant 162
- which need not be proved 739
- which need not be proved meaning of 710
- which support or rebut an inference 139
- which the Court must take judicial notice 713
- which are the occasion cause and effect its meaning 100
- of facts in issue 99
- prior cause as the basis of inference of 100
- real meaning of cause or effect 101
- concomitant events as the basis of inference 101
- distinction between possibility, causality (tendency) and cause as the object of evidence evidencing a subsequent effect on the basis of inference 100
- Failure of cross examination circumstances 571
- to appear or to testify as evidence against the party effect of 127
- to produce evidence effect of, 127
- False confession—The reason of making 363
- Falsehood fraud fabrication and suppression of evidence etc inadmissible 122
- False representation and cheating 11
- principles admissibility other evidence 266
- Family arrangement estoppel is to 266
- caution how proved 157
- character nature of 347
- usurpation evidence as to 703
- Fear exhibited by the accused and inference against him 127
- Feelings at other times if relevant 116
- Financial standing of defendant Proof of if relevant 177
- Finger impression Practice of 859
- First information report admissibility and value of 1330
- report if admissible 1370
- Flight from justice etc if evidence how explained away 126
- Foreign expression not common intelligible, evidence of, 1018
- judgment how impeached an Indian law 652
- judgment induced by fraud, etc of, 651
- judgment nature of 620
- law, how proved 611
- law, Justice Story on proof of 671
- Forgery and counterfeiting Proof of 257
- Former Statement of witness may be proved to corroborate later testimony as to some fact, 1367
- which can be given as corroborative evidence 1372
- Form of questions to be put to expert witness 671
- Foundation for direct testimony, witness if necessary, 1361
- Fraud by agent if admissible, 125
- effect of, in compromise decree 651
- instances of, in probate cases 645
- or collusion in obtaining judgment or incompetency of Court, may be proved, 641
- meaning of, 645
- oral proof of 938
- whether necessary to give rise to estoppel 1182
- Fraudulent intention—proof of 257
- transfer to defraud creditors—circumstances to be considered 257
- Future of the doctrine of Intention 708
- Gazette of India nature of 609
- presumption as to genuineness of 879
- proof of if necessary, 609
- General caution meaning of 187
- disposition meaning of 77
- exception burden of proof 1007
- principles of relevant burden of proof 1003
- principle of authentication 523
- principle of privileged communication 1250
- reputation meaning of 757
- Genuineness of document affected by suspicious circumstances 991
- presumed or not presumed by oral and Court 903
- Good character previous in criminal cases relevant 717
- though never conclusive yet may acquit when 721
- Good faith—what it is 212
- Good will when it means 217
- Government Gazette if admissible for Grounds of opinion when relevant 710

- Guardianship certificate, if admissible as a public record 597
- Habit, if evidence can be given of, 253
- Handwriting evidence—objection based on principle of confusion of issues 679
- evidence—objection based on unfair selection of specimen 675
- who are expert in, 681
- Hearsay evidence, meaning of—and why it is discarded, 778
- nature of, as an extra judicial testimonial assertion, 164
- of the family as to particular fact if excluded, 541
- rule and its exception—its historical development, etc., 464
- rule, exception to, 467
- rule, limitation under English law, if proper, 477
- rule theory of 467
- Highly probable—cases, illustrating, 170
- what it signifies, 166
- Hindu widow, estoppel in case of, 1185
- History of a family, if admissible, 170
- Hostile witness—English law as regards, 1350
- leading questions to, if allowed, 1352
- Horoscope, evidentiary value of, 548
- Husband and wife if party as witnesses, 1215
- old rule of excluding their evidence, 1230
- Husband or wife as witness in civil cases 1224
- as witness in criminal cases 1224
- as witness in proceedings under Divorce Act 1225
- Identification by finger impressions value of, 682
- cases of, if admissible in other cases 147
- Identity evidence and opinion Rule, 145
- evidence its general principle 141
- evidence, test of its admissibility 141
- of things, how to be presumed 144
- testimony what is 662
- Identity of person by photograph, 144
- by voice or appearance 144
- from family name and initial 141
- from identity of name 142
- Idiocy if disability of witness, 1220
- Ill will, malice etc., what they imply, 245
- Immovable property meaning of 1199
- Impeaching credit of one's own witness when allowed, 1366
- of witness 1348
- Impeaching one's own witness, if allowed, 1352
- Improper admission and rejection of Evidence in Civil cases effect of, 1401
- admission and rejection of evidence in criminal cases effect of, 1402
- inducement its subsequent end of, 430
- Inadmissible documents, nature of, 1380
- Inconsistent and contradicting accounts of the circumstances of the crime if relevant 128
- pleas not allowed, 1180
- Indecent and scandalous question, 1340
- exposure, evidence of, 271
- Inducement, a person who has offered it if he can put an end to it 451
- if irrevocable 431
- if sufficient by possibility to elicit an untrue confession of guilt 351
- involving a higher punishment mild treatment in prison or a reward of money if vitiated confession, 391
- offered by one person and confession made to another effect of, 431
- removal of, it must be sufficient in the opinion of the Court 432
- to be effective must come into existence, 430
- to vitiate a confession must come from 'person in authority' 352
- what suffices in general, to an end, 431
- when brought to an end questions to be determined 430
- Infidels and Atheists as witnesses 1214
- Information as to commission of offences 1279
- how much received from accused may be proved, 411
- so much as relates distinctly to facts thereby discovered if admissible 420
- to be admissible must lead directly to discovery of facts 427
- whether amounts to a confession, 427
- whether includes mere statements 416
- Insanity if disability of witness 1220
- Insolvency jurisdiction, nature of, 61
- Instances as illustration, 191
- its number if to be considered 192
- to prove trial custom 192
- Insult or annoy questions intended to, 1341
- Integration of bilateral documents, 930
- Intention, if affected by subsequent erroneous description, 1005

Leading questions—concluded

- when may be asked, 1324
- when must not be asked, 1319

Legislative recitals, principles relating to, 606*Legitimacy as evidenced by conduct 706

- conduct of supposed father and mother if relevant, 1100
- declaration of husband and wife, 1101

Hindu law on, 1103

if question of evidence, 1103

Mahomedan law, 1103

parents' access to be proved, 1099

presumption of, 1103

proof of parents' marriage, 1102

Letters or pipes, Rule as to, 616

Likeness if relevant in question of paternity, 117*Limitation saving of, by acknowledgment of one partner, 312*Loss and destruction of original, sufficiency of search, 809*Local and provincial expressions, evidence of, 1020

customs, requisites of, 188

terms of phrases, meaning of words 703

Magistrate meaning of, 410*Manager of a Hindu Joint family position of, 304*Maps and chittas etc., if admissible, 222*Material effect, illustrative cases 105

effect, what it is 104

error, new trial under English law, 1398

Matrimonial jurisdiction nature of, 630*Matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, 935*Maxim utile per inutile non vultur Application in cases, 1008*Medical evidence, nature of, 687*Mental and moral effects on human conduct as evidence, 103*Mistake if operates as an estoppel, 1167

of fact and section 31 of the Specific Relief Act 964 of fact proof of, 963

of law, proof of, 964

or fraud party can show, in order to rebut his express or implied admission, 344

Mortgage, proof of, 916*Motive absence of, its proof when material 113

absence of, to misrepresent essential in determining admissibility, 511 circumstances tending to excite, 114

Motive—concluded conduct proves 116

if essential, 113

its adequacy, 114

its relevancy 112

meaning of, 111

or conduct if relevant in aggravation and mitigation of damages, 175 preparation and previous or subsequent conduct, if relevant, 110

Multiple examiners, law as to 1308

of witness 1308

Necessary witnesses nature of, 1355*Negative allegation and burden of proof, 1031

Negligence whether can be inferred from repair of machine, highway or the like after an injury 245

whether proved by habit, 244

Newspaper, presumption as to genuineness of 879*Non access of husband to show illegitimacy if admissible, 166*No new trial for improper admission or rejection of evidence, 1396*Notary public, character of, 899*Notice to produce document in question as prescribed by the law, 817*Number of witness, 1290*Oaths Act 1187*Oath, nature of, 1219*Objection in second appeal if allowed, 1401

to questions in examination in chief by other party time of, 1303 to questions by other party 1303 waiver of, what amounts to 839

Obsolete expressions evidence of, 1019*Officer's discretion if public interest would suffer by the disclosure, 1238*Official acts regularity, 1117

book, register or record, enumeration of, 592 communication, 1236 documents, proof of, 870

records relating to affairs of state, evidence of, 1245 reports, registers etc value of, 601

Omission to sue for the whole of the claim, effect of, 623*Opinion and fact how to distinguish, 659

as to existence of right or custom when relevant, 693

as to handwriting, when relevant, 686 evidence as regards sanity, 661 evidence to prove handwriting 677 evidence when is admissible, 666

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT

Opinion—concluded

evidence why is excluded, 657 evidence, rule against if applicable to dying declaration, 479 from necessity of circumstances, 664 of witnesses, scope of the rule, rejecting, 660 rule gradual growth, 658 when is admissible, 781 of experts 665
 of the third person when relevant, 656
 on relationship when relevant 704 Opportunity explaining away, 109
 if evidence 109
 when exclusive if conclusive, 109
 Oral evidence, if document is silent and terms not inconsistent with the terms of contract, 969 is admissible in what cases, 911 if admissible 561 must be direct 777
 nature of 769
 of documents nature of, 347 of documents Rule in the United States 348 weight and value of 770
 what facts may be proved, 770 when the informal and incomplete document is silent, 968
 Order of examination 1293
 of production and examination of witnesses 1293
 Ordinary course of business document purporting to be written etc 694
 Other maps nature of 605
 presumptions, 1138
 public documents 865
 Owner of various animal—Proof of his knowledge, 250
 Palm impressions, nature of 695
 Pardon, subsequent whether affects the admissibility of such evidence 1347
 Parol evidence as between the parties in such instrument 932
 as to terms of any contract grant or disposition of property, 934 rule—Nature of 932
 Parol proof as to execution and delivery on suspension of operation 973
 of subsequent agreement in case where the document has been reduced into writing 977 of subsequent agreement in cases of transaction which is required by law to be in writing and registered 978
 of subsequent agreement 976
 Part II of Evidence Act—Scope of 713

Partial integration, 930

Parties on record—nonunal—general rule of admission, if applicable in case of, 297 to civil suit and their wives or husbands, husband or wife of person under criminal trial, 1223 to the suit as witness, 1215 Party can not plead his own fraud or collusion, 653
 estopped from pleading fraud, 1171
 meaning of, 817
 Patent ambiguities—Starkie's classification, 997
 and latent ambiguities—difference between, 995
 Pecuniary capacity if relevant to probability of his prying or lending 168
 Personal acknowledgment, meaning
 of, 835
 attendance to be dispensed with when presence cannot be obtained without an amount of delay or expense 565
 Person claiming through tenant, position of 1200
 peculiarly interested as witness 1215 who can take advantage of the representation, 1153 Photographic copies of document, if admitted, 859
 Plaints written statements, decrees etc,
 nature of 862
 Plans and intentions as to Wills, contracts, deeds if relevant, 121
 Police custody meaning of, 108 diaries nature of 1330 officer, meaning of 402 410
 Position of active confederate, meaning
 of 1097
 Possession, burden of proof, 1033 by the accused of the fruits of crime, when relevant, 128
 meaning of 1083
 of stolen property, when recent, accused a defence 1109
 what constitutes, 1085
 Post mark use of if evidence of delivery in due course 277
 Preliminary warning nature of, 1361 Preparation from which guilt cannot be inferred 118
 if relevant 116
 to accomplish the crime charged if admissible 116
 to aid his escape if relevant, 117 to avert suspicion from himself, if relevant, 117
 to prevent discovery of crime if relevant, 117

Pre requisites of opinion evidence by expert, 668 of judicial notice 711

Presence, meaning of signature of a Purdanashin lady, how to be attested, 833

Present recollection whether there should be any fixed rules of limitation, 1375

Presumption as regards common course of business, 1118 as regards judicial and official acts, 1115 as rule of law, process of development, 61

Presumption as to acceptance, 1122 advancement, 1123
adultery, 1123 alteration, 1123
assent, 1121
attestation 1124
benami, 1124
best evidence, 1125
bills of Exchange, 1112 books, maps and charts 891
bond 1125
certified copies of foreign judicial records, 889 character, 1125
child bearing age, 1125 collection of law and reports of decision, 886 complicating presumption 1126 continuance of state of things, 1113 co sharer's possession, 1126 deaths, 1127
debts, 1127
delay in enforcing rights, 1127
document, 872
document admissible in England without proof of seal or signature, 880 document admissible without proof of seal or signature—scope of English law, 881 document of thirty years 893 documents produced as records of evidence, 874 domicile, 1127
due execution etc., of documents not produced, 892 duty 1127
encroachment by tenant 1128 exclusive possession, 1112 fraud, 1128
Gazettes, news papers private Act of Parliament and other documents 878 gift 1128
good faith, 1128

Presumption as to—concluded grant, 1128
Hindu Law applicability, 1128,
Hindu Law Endowment, 1128
Hindu Law-Joint family, 1129
Hindu widow, 1129
husband and wife, 1129
identity, 1130
infancy, 1130
innocence, 1130
insanity, 1133
intent and knowledge, 1131 issues, 1135
joint property, 1135 knowledge of law, 1137 legitimacy 1136
maps or plans made by authority of Government, 881
Mahomedan Law, 1136
Marriage, 1136 negligence, 1137
personal appearance, 1137
possession, 1137
powers of attorney, 887 reasonable doubt, 1132 religion, 1137 sanity, 1137 services, 1138
solvency, 1138
Statutory presumptions 1138 telegraphic messages, 892 tenancy, 1138
Time of death, 1072

Presumption from withholding evidence 1118 from withholding evidence, exception to 1120
if necessary witnesses not called, 1120
in cases of landlords and tenants, 1080 in cases of Principal and agent 1080 its relation to the law of evidence, 65
meaning of, 60
meaning of 'may presume,' and 'shall presume', 63 mixed, 62
not been heard of 1075 of continuance of relation of confidence, 1089 of continuance of possession, 1085 of death according to Hindu and Mahomedan Law 1072 of death persons who would naturally have heard of him, meaning of, 1075 of death, when arises, 1070 of facts, 60
of law, 61

Public—concluded documents, certified copies of 866 record, entry in, if made by another person in performance of duty 591 record, entry in, must be in discharge of official duty 591 records kept in British India of private records, 866 servant meaning of, 592
 Qualification of an expert, 669
 Quantum and weight of evidence, 697 Question by party to his own witness, 1319 lawful in cross examination, 1332 misleading nature of 1325 not to be asked without reasonable grounds 1340 tending to corroborate evidence of relevant fact admissible, 1366
 Rape, evidence of 270
 Reasons of objection under English law to corroborative evidence before any impeachment 1365 Recent possession of stolen property burden of proof, 1107 Receiving of money for testimony, effect of 1362 Recital contained in any Act of Parliament, etc., nature of, 607 in documents if evidence 217 in any Act of Parliament, if conclusive, 608 in old documents if admissible, 169 Record of right if admissible 597 or memorandum of evidence according to law 875
 Re establishment of credit, how effected, 1361
 Re examination, 1298 direction of, 1298
 nature of, 1316
 Reference to be admissible must be express, 332
 Refreshing memory 1374
 Refusal to answer, presumption for, 1121
 Register or record, meaning of 592 which are not public documents 866
 Regularity of public office, presumption of 276
 Res gestæ basis of the theory, 82 facts forming 81 meaning of the term, 76 phrase exact and indefinite 77 written document as part of, 82
 Res judicata by general principles of law, 621
 meaning of 621
 Relations by blood marriage etc., whose declarations are admissible, 533

Relationship by marriage evidence from conduct 701
 Relevancy and effect of judgments order or decrees other than those mentioned in section 11 633
 Its distinction from admissibility 65 of certain evidence for proving in subsequent proceedings the truth of facts therein stated, 576 of certain judgments in probate etc. jurisdiction, 624 of entry in public record made in performance of duty 586
 of facts 66
 of facts forming part of the same transaction 25 of statements as to any law contained in law books 610 of statements as to fact of public nature contained in certain Acts or notification 606 of statements in maps, charts, and plans, 601 or necessity or in communication, 1219 which are excluded 103
 Report to the Police, if relevant, 168 Representation, form of 1151 must be on existing facts 1154 Reputation, character of 735 cross examination of a witness as to, 736 nature and formation of 746 person qualified to testify to, 736 time and character of 736 Requisition of valid attestation, 831 Right meaning of 183 of adverse party as to writing used to refresh memory, 1383 scope of 700
 to begin procedure in a case 1295
 Rewajam entries, in proof of custom 220 Road cess paper, if evidence, 222, 501 return whether admissible in favour of a party making it 341 Rules laid down in Colpoys v Colpoys 997 as to notice to produce, 815
 Ruling of the Courts if evidence 612
 Sale proof of 917
 Saving of provision of Indian Succession Act, relating to Will, 1023
 Search list, nature of, 919
 Secrecy, who determines the 1235
 Secondary evidence, 784
 if admissible when the adverse party has the original in Court 821

Secondary evidence—concluded

if admissible when the adverse party must know that he will be required to produce it 819

if admissible, when the adverse party or his pleader has admitted loss of document, 822

if admissible where the document to be proved is itself a notice, 818

if admissible—when the opponent has obtained fraudulent possession of it etc, 820

if admissible when the person in possession of the document is out of the reach of or not subject of the Court, 822

meaning of, 785

no preference as regards any kind of, 792 of the contents, meaning of, 817 relating to documents, cases in which may be given, 795

when after notice to opponent, he does not produce it, 806

when certified copy permitted by the Act, 812

when the original consists of numerous documents 813

when the original has been lost or destroyed, 807

when original in the possession or power of the adversary, 801 when the original is a public document, 812

when the original is not easily moveable, 811

when written admission as to the documents of original document, 807

Section must be construed strictly 411

Section 6 Illustrative cases 89

Section 7 Illustrations scope of 110

Limits of its rule 100

Section 8 explanation I scope of 129

Section 8 illustrative cases, 135

Section 9 Illustration (a), scope of, 148

Illustration (b) scope of, 148

Illustration (c), scope of 149

Illustrations (d) and (e), scope of, 149

Illustration (f), scope of 149

Illustrative cases, 149

Section 10 anything said or done etc what it implies 159

a rule of substantive law and not a rule of evidence 154 difference between English and Indian law 155

illustrative cases 161

its application existence of reason able ground 156,

Section 10—concluded

its illustration 157,

order of proof 157

Section 11, if, controlled by section 32, 164

illustration (b) meaning of, 169

illustrative cases, 172

Section 13, illustrative cases under, 3

Section 13 Judgment whether relevant under it, 196

Allahabad cases, 209

Bombay cases, 205

Burma cases, 214

Calcutta cases 196

English cases 196

Lahore cases, 214

Madras cases 211

Nagpur cases 214

Oudh cases 213

Privy Council cases 215

Section 14 Explanation I scope of, 2

Explanation II scope of 233

illustration (d) scope of, 231 illustrations (i) and (j) scope of 25

illustrative cases 238

Section 15 illustrative cases 272

Section 16 illustrative cases 278

Section 18 illustrative cases, 327

Section 19, illustrative cases, 329

Limitation act whether excluded secondary evidence of acknowledgment lost or destroyed, 800

Section 20 illustrative cases 334

what questions may be referred under it 334

Section 21 clause (1) scope of 339 clause (2) Principle underlying 341

clause (2) scope of 342

clause (3) scope of 343

exception to 339

illustrative cases under 344

Section 22, origin of the rule 345

Section 23, explanation, meaning of, 355

illustrative cases under 355

principles analogous to that of privileged communications, 349 theory on the analogy of the notion of contract, 349

Section 24, criticism of, 381

having reference to a charge against the accused meaning of 388

if applicable where threats made but not influencing the conduct of the accused 390

"if it appears" its meaning of 378 influence of a religious or of a moral nature, meaning of 399

"of a temporal nature" meaning of 399

n 24—concluded, proceedings, what they mean, 392 sufficient in the opinion of the Court
 meaning of, 399,
 n 25, origin of 398
 of, 16
 reason of the rule, 397
 n 26, origin of, 407
 under reason of the rule of, 407 her reason 27, accused person in custody
 meaning of, 119
 in fact, meaning of, 115
 deposited to, meaning of, 416 discovered meaning of, 416 distinctly meaning of, 428 from a person meaning of, 418 in relation to section 162 of the Cr Pro Code, 428
 origin of the rule, 412
 ion 29, "description," meaning
 of, 434
 of, promise of secrecy, meaning
 of, 433
 whence he was drunk, meaning
 of, 435
 ion 30, "Court," meaning of, 449
 "May take into consideration"
 meaning of, 449
 proving the confession" if applicable, 449
 concluded, "same offence" meaning of, 441 know scope of, 446
 destroyed, "tried jointly," meaning of, 441 ion 32 "cannot be found," meaning of, 472
 referred Deid meaning of, 472
 "delay or expense" instances of, 473 399 first principle, necessity, 468
 g, 312 illustration (n), meaning of, 556
 "incapable of giving evidence,"
 meaning of, 473
 person, meaning of, 472
 requisites of admissibility under, 470 second principle, circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness, 468 tion 32, clause II, and section 31, 494 of cases under, 499
 on, 349 circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness, illustration, 489 e notori contemporaneous, necessity under
 the Indian Evidence Act, 497 declaration within "personal knowledge" 497
 duty to a third person if necessary under, 497
 English law on the point, 495
 English rule of duty to a third person, 496
 extrinsic proof of the death or other disability of the declarant, 499 form or mark of the entry, 499

Section 32 clause II—concluded necessity principle, as illustrated in, 489

 origin of, 495
 principle, underlying 489
 scope of, 488

Section 32, clause III circumstantial

guarantee of trustworthiness illustrated, 504
 declarant's personal knowledge, 515 declarations held admissible
 under, 616
 declarations held not admissible
 under, 517
 declarations, if to be contemporaneous of entry, 515
 difference between English and
 Indian law, 503
 English law on the point, 502
 extrinsic proof of declarant's death or disability, 515
 necessity principle illustrated, 504
 origin of, the rule, 504
 scope of, 501 statement may be verbal as well as written, 514
 "statement," meaning of, 510 statement to be made, anti litum
motam, 514

Section 32, clause IV, circumstantial guarantee of truth, illustrated, 522

death or other inability to be proved, 521
 declarations must be anti litum
motam, 527
 "interest," meaning of, 525
 "necessity" principle illustrated
 in, 522
 "opinion" meaning of, 525
 "opinion" nature of, 526 origin of the rule of, 522 statement, admissible under, 528
 statement, nature of, 523

Section 32 clause V, cases under, 542 circumstantial guarantee, illustrated, 531

contemporaneousness of the statement, 541
 declarant's means of knowledge, 536 declarant's personal knowledge, if necessary, 536
 declarant's special means of knowledge, 537
 declarations must be made before the dispute, 533
 difference between, English and
 Indian law, 530
 English law on the point 530
 necessity principle, illustrated 530
 qualification of the declarant, 538

Section 32 clause V—continued statement may be made of what kind of facts, 510

statement, nature of, 531

Section 32, clauses V & VI, difference between, 531

value of statements under, 550

Section 32, clause VI, cases under, 545

principle of authentication applied, 549

Section 32 clause VII, scope of, 551 other cases under, 555Section 32 clause VIII condition of admissibility under, 556
scope of, 555Section 33, explanation, scope of 573

proviso para (1) scope of 555

proviso para (2) scope of 569

proviso para (3) scope of 573

whether controlled by section 550 of the Cr Pro Code 572

Section 34 origin of the, 576*Section 35, documents admissible
under 595

documents not admissible under 600

Section 39 by whom such evidence can be given and how much 615*Section 42 Origin of the rule 631*Section 43, irrelevant under some other provisions of the Act meaning of 639*Section 44 'not competent' meaning of 643*Section 45 origin of the rule 666*Section 47 handwriting signature etc meaning of 689*Section 49 explanation scope of 701*Section 50 Proviso scope of 707*Section 53 origin of the rule in 719*Section 54 Explanation I scope of, 726

explanation II scope of 726
old section 722

Section 55 explanation meaning of 731*Section 56 need not be proved meaning of, 743*Section 57 Cl I scope of 716*Section 57 Cl III Scope of 747*Section 57, Clause V scope of 717*Section 57 Clause VI scope of 717*Section 57 Clause VII scope of 719*Section 57 Clause VIII scope of 749*Section 57 Clause XI scope of, 753*Section 57 Clause XIII scope of 753
whether the list given in is complete 711Section 58 proviso scope of 767*Section 59 wording, in the section 769*Section 60 proviso I scope of, 781

proviso II scope of, 782

Section 62 Explanation I scope
of 786

Explanation II, scope of, 786

Section 63 Cl I scope of, 789*Section 63 clause II, Scope of 789*Section 63 clause III Scope of 788*Section 64, origin of the rule in 793*Section 65 clause A if includes cases where the document is in possession of any person out of the reach or not subject to the process of the Court 802

"of any person legally bound to produce it, meaning of" 805 clause B 807

clause D 811

clause G 812

of the Evidence Act and Section
19 of the Registration Act, 799

Section 68 before amendment by Act
XXVI of 1926 837

Proviso Scope of, 842

Section 78 clause I Scope of 871

clause III 871

clause, V Scope of, 871

clause VI Scope of 872

Section 82, origin of, 880*Section 90, Explanation, Scope of, 904*Section 91, Application of, to an oral statement made by a witness to a Police officer 920

Exception I Scope of, 920

Exception II Scope of 921

Explanation I Scope of 921

Explanation II Scope of 921

Explanation III, Scope of, 924

Section 92, Illustrations Scope of, 901

Proviso I scope of 956

Proviso (2)—circumstances where proviso, applies 968

Provision (2)—Scope of 967

Proviso (3)—Scope of 971

Proviso (4)—Scope of, 976

Proviso (5)—Scope of 980

Scope of the provisos of, 956

Section 95—application of 1005
Illustrative, cases, 1008Section 96—Application of, 1011
Similar law, 1010Section 97 if applicable to the case a document when whole of it does not apply correctly to either, 1015 Illustrative cases 1015Section 107, origin and growth of the rule 1066*Section 111, application of the rule Act of Will, 1091

Section 112, origin and growth of the rule of, 1095

Section 114, illustration (A) 1107 illustration (B) 1112
 illustration (C) 1112
 illustration (D) 1113
 illustration (E) 1115
 illustration (F) 1118
 illustration (G) 1119
 illustration (H) 1121
 illustration (I) 1121

Section 115, of the Evidence Act and Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, difference between 1186

"person" meaning of, 1170

requisites of 1150

whether exhaustive of all kinds of estoppels 1149

Sections 116 and 117 whether are exhaustive 1204

Section 120 Reason of the rule, 1223

Section 126 "Any time" meaning of 1247 express consent, nature of, 1247 proviso (1) communications in furtherance of any illegal purpose if privileged, 1254

proviso (2) scope of, 1257

to apply to interpreters, 1258

Section 130 unless heagreed in writing etc" meaning of, 1264

Section 132 para I, Scope of 1296 para II scope of, 1297 para III, scope of, 1293
 proviso, scope of, 1268

Section 144 object of, 1326

Section 145 objections to the rule as laid down in Queen's Case, 1327

tion 147 if such question etc meaning of, 133

tion 148 "so remote" meaning of, 1339

Section 153, Exception I, scope of, 1345
 exception II scope of, 1345

Section 154 consideration under it, 1356

Section 155, cl 1, scope of, 1359 cl 3, evidence of former inconsistent statement, 1362 explanation, scope of, 1365
 proviso (4) scope of 1367

Section 157, English law on the point, 1367

if violates the Hearsay Rule, 1368

whether the section is affected by s 162, 1371

Section 159 and section 160, difference between, 1383

Section 159—concluded

"any writing" meaning of 1378

"at the time of transaction", meaning of, 1379

"made by himself" meaning of, 1378

"writing made by any other person", meaning of 1379

Section 165 "ask any question", meaning of, 1394 construction of, 1394
 English rule on the point 1390
 proviso (1), scope of 1396
 proviso (2), scope of 1396

Section 167, English and Indian law differentiated, 1399 equally applicable to civil and criminal cases, 1400

"if it shall appear to the Court etc" meaning of, 1400

Seditious speeches, evidence of intention 255

Self infliction of person if admissible in case of an indictment of crime 166

Setting fire to buildings, evidence of 264

Sex disability in witness 1216

Signature of and handwriting of person alleged to have signed or written document produced proof of, 823

nature of, 825

of a partnership firm 696

writing or seal, comparison of with other admitted or proved 852

Silence a toppel by nature of 1175

if relevant, 126

Special diaries of the police officer if can be used to refresh memory, 1381

exception burden of proof, 1077

Spontaneous explanations as genuine exceptions to the Hearsay Rule 91 reason for accepting such statements, 96

requisites for admitting such evidence, 96

Statement accompanying production of articles its effect, 417 admissible for all facts contained in it, 312 against interest of maker when admissible 162 against pecuniary interest, nature of, 506 against pecuniary interest if includes statement resulting to criminal prosecution and suit for damages, 509

Statement—continued

against proprietary interest, nature of, 530 are admissible to prove the facts contained in the statement on any issue, 539 as exceptions to Hearsay Rule, 218 as regards boundary nature of, 519 as to existence of relationship when admissible, 462 by agents principles of admissibility, 298 by persons from whom interest is derived, if receivable, 324 by persons who cannot be called as witnesses, 461 entirely exonerating the maker and implicating his co-prisoners if a confession, 419 expressing opinion as to public right or custom of general interest when admissible, 462 forms part of conversation document, book or series of letters or papers when evidence is to be given, 619 how much of it is to be proved, 613 in document relating to transaction in section 13 cl (a), when admissible, 463 in will or deed nature of, 546 in a will or deed relating to family affairs, 462 made by agents in cases of torts if admission against principal nature of, 301 made by agents in criminal cases if admission against principal, 305 made by a party if admissible, 296 made by several persons and expressing feelings relevant to matter in question, 463 made by party to proceeding or his agent by suitor in representative character by party interested in subject matter by person from whom interest derived if admissible, 29 made by testatrix to prove the Will if admissible, 170 made by the plaintiff if admissible, 169 made in course of business if includes verbal statement, 493 made in course of business when inadmissible, 162 made in course of ordinary business if admissible, 190 made under contract or duress, if admissible, 21

Statement—concluded

made under special circumstances while pointing out fact of the crime, effect of, 41
 meaning of, 615
 of persons who cannot be witnesses, 461 of sundry facts against nature of, 510 of relevant fact by person dead or cannot be found relevant, when, 161 post litem motam, if untrue, 344 preceding finding upon inquiry its effect, 117 proved relevant under section 33, what matters may be in its connection, 1374 relating to cause of death admissible, 462 whether verbal or written of relevant facts, 471 when it must be against interest which affects the conduct, 135
 State of body of the mother in question of maternity or bodily feeling, how proved, 137
 State of mind proved by circumstantial facts, 231
 the importance in civil cases, 232
 State of things under which happened if evidence is, 10
 Statutes, Retrospective operation interpretation of, 3
 Stay of suits under section 40, 623
 Stolen property receiving knowledge, 250
 Subsequent conduct if relevance existence is evidence, 1114
 Sudden change in the circumstances the accused if relevant flight—explanation, 139 Suits for damages facts enable Court to determine is relevant, 174 to set aside an ex parte decree to set aside judgment of fraud etc, 654 Survey maps, if evidence, 60
 Survival of the alleged death admissible, 166
 Technical expression evidence Telegrams as evidence, 922 time of receipt and evidence, 277

11679
 214/200

